

UNFAIR TO LOVE

By Watkins E. Wright

Chapter 32

Another Picket

"He did a boy-scout good deed!" said Uncle Frank, appearing in the doorway. "My car got out of order just when I needed it most, and he came forward with his—like a thoroughbred."

"You mean he—" Kathleen stopped, completely confused.

"Ducky," said Uncle Frank, "meet your aunt!" He came out, stood with his arm around Ruby. "Pretty sudden, I know—but we had to get married in between performances."

Kathleen found her voice at last. And when she spoke it was hard for her to keep the singing in her heart from breaking forth into sound.

"Mind?" she said, laughing. "I'm delighted." She kissed Ruby, and she hugged her uncle. "Only, I—I thought it was Joe who married. So did Fred DeMille. He saw you and Joe get—" into Joe's car early this morning, and so—

"Me marry a mere kid?" exclaimed Ruby. "The idea!"

"Where is Joe now?" Kathleen asked.

"He's working at the office, I think," Uncle Frank replied. "He said he had a lot of work to catch up."

Kathleen smiled. "Excuse me, you two newlyweds, while I go see to the meal!" In the doorway, she paused for a second. "Do you really feel marriage is—more important than a career, Ruby?"

"I certainly do," said Ruby. She reached up and patted Uncle Frank's cheek. "We're going to be terribly happy, I know—Frank and I."

"You bet we are," agreed Uncle Frank. "And Ruby's going to work with Joe on his play. Maybe when they try it out next summer, you can have a part in it."

"Thank," said Kathleen, but without enthusiasm. She went into the dining room. She got out her best tablecloth, the fine old Vaughan silver, and the sterling silver candlesticks that had belonged to her great-grandmother. She arranged the table so that it would have made a splendid illustration for a good housekeeping magazine. And Lizzy was just as successful with the food that she served.

"Why didn't you elope in Ruby's car?" Kathleen asked suddenly.

"Good lord, Ducky," said Uncle Frank. "I'd feel like a fool eloping in a car belonging to the girl I was marrying!"

"He said," smiled Ruby, "that it would be too much like a kidnapping."

"I see," said Kathleen, remembering what she had said to Fred that morning. "Anyway, it was nice to have Joe along for one of the witnesses. I'm sorry I overslept."

Then Ruby and Uncle Frank were hurrying off to the barn theater, and Kathleen was alone. She sat there upon the porch, watching the fireflies, and listening to the summer insects. And still no telephone call from Joe. Stubborn, unforgiving! Eight o'clock came and went. Nine o'clock. Kathleen could stand the waiting no longer. She leaped to her feet, her eyes shining. She had an idea—a wonderful idea. She ran into the house, and up to her room. There she shut herself in, careful to lock the door so that Lizzy couldn't come barging in unannounced.

It was a little after ten o'clock when she came out again, and it was half an hour later than that when Joe Neely went to the window of the Linville Gazette office to look out, and saw her. He stared, unbelieving, for Kathleen was marching up and down in front of the building, and she carried a placard which bore the words: "Joe Neely is Unfair to Love."

When he had recovered his faculties so that he could speak, he leaned out of the window and called: "Kathleen, darling! I'll be right down!"

He slammed shut the window, and went racing down the stairs. A moment later the placard Kathleen had been carrying lay in the gutter, and Kathleen herself nestled in Joe's arm.

"You precious little idiot," he whispered, "where on earth did you get that silly thing?"

"I made it," said Kathleen. "I made it all for you, my precious idiot. And if you don't tell me you love me, I'll picket you until—until the cows come home!"

"I love you," said Joe.

"Darling!" said Kathleen. "Now I'm going to put Mary and Martha back in my old barn, just the minute those actors get out!"

White House Aids in Rubber Salvage

Washington, June 18.—(AP)—The White House turned in its contribution today to the rubber collection campaign and a truck hauled away some 400 pounds of such items as old garden hose, runners for floors and corridors, sponge rubber mats to keep rugs from slipping, discarded overshoes and a single ball. The rubber was donated.

QUEEN BEES CAN'T GIVE FOULBROOD RESISTANCE

Salem, June 17.—(AP)—It won't do beekeepers any good to buy resistant queen stock in order to guarantee their bees' immunity from American foulbrood, the State Department of Agriculture said today.

Some bee queen breeders have been advertising falsely that their resistant queen stock would guarantee such immunity, the department added.

LEGAL NOTICES

Seasonality Redetermination
Notice is hereby given that the Oregon Unemployment Compensation Commission has reviewed all seasonal determinations made for the years 1938, 1939, 1940, and 1941 in the light of the Supreme Court decision in Layman vs. State Unemployment Compensation Commission.

"A list of the employers and their tentative seasons as redetermined by the Commission is available for the inspection of any interested party at any local office of the U. S. Employment Service. Each employer who may be affected by a redetermination is being sent a notice to that effect and instructed to post the notice for the information of his employees."

"If any interested party believes that any proposed redetermination of seasons is not consistent with the Supreme Court's decision in the Layman Case, he may file a protest with the Commission not later than July 1, 1942. Any worker who believes that he was improperly denied benefits because of seasonality restrictions may so advise the Commission through any local U. S. Employment Office. Whenever it is necessary, hearings will be held before a final decision is made."

STRANGE AS IT SEEMS

STRAD'S COMPETITOR

Young Bill Moennig won't admit that his violins are superior to the famed fiddles made by the old master, Stradivarius, but a professor at Harvard has pronounced Moennig's work superior in many ways. The professor says that the new violins are easier to play, requiring less effort on the player's part, and the sound is somewhat more uniform over the pitch range than the originals. To copy the old instruments Moennig secured photographs and measurements of the originals and imported special woods from Europe.
