Blood Donations

Total 3 Gallons

Harrisburg, Pa.—(U.P.)—John R. Funk, who has donated more than three gallons of his blood in the past five years, recently gave his 29th pint to the Red Cross plasma bank here.

The 30-year-old steelworker is 6 feet 2 inches and weighs 220 pounds. Funk says he eats plasma-bounding foods and gets plenty of exercise—and the big-scale blood-letting "never bothers me at all."

The importance of good lighting is emphasized when it is understood 87 per cent of impressions received are recorded by the eyes.

ECCENTRIC DIES BUT NEIGHBORS STILL A-DITHER

$250,000 Found in Home of Supposedly Moderately-Fixed Missouri Doctor.

Hornersville, Mo. (UP)—Dr. Floyd Kinsolving, aged Missouri jack-of-all-trades and eccentric, is dead, but his very eccentricism has kept his neighbors in a dither and his estate isn't any nearer settlement than it was when he died May 5.

Called wealthy by the townsfolk, Dr. Kinsolving, who practiced law, medicine, surveying, herpetology, teaching, and farming among other things, borrowed money to plant his cotton crop last year.

When he died there was little evidence of wealth around his rambling 18-room farm home. But a country banker reported the deceased farmer had purchased $50,000 worth of war bonds in January and they were no where to be found.

May Wreck Home—That started a search for his fortune. Before it ended nearly $250,000 in cash and negotiable papers had been discovered—and even now many neighbors maintain that not all the cash or paper has been found. They believe there is more in the old home, among the litter of old cars, trailers, farm machinery and bottles which the late doctor saved.

Searchers discovered cash in odd corners of the home. The largest cache of more than $60,000 was in a tin box hidden away in a niche cut in concrete under the back porch. A large can on a basement shelf contained $1,700 in silver. In another can was $2,000 in $100 bills. Several hundred dollars were found between pages of books. Trustees of his estate may order the home wrecked to be certain other valuables aren't overlooked.

Kept Autos

During his life Dr. Kinsolving gave his neighbors plenty to think about. They laughed when he brought in 3,000 geese to cut down the Johnson grass between his rows of cotton. It worked, and many Missouri bootleg farmers now have their own flocks of geese.

Every automobile the doctor owned was on his farm when he died. The first was a 1911 model. There were 30 good tires in the basement of his house.

Two new Persian rugs were among his household effects. Twenty-four gold watches, all purchased at once, were found. None of them had been wound since they left the jeweler's. He spent 13 years building his own steel and black walnut house trailer. Then he bought a new ready made one. Neither was ever used.

Hornersville doesn't believe the last has been heard of Dr. Kinsolving. Although there have been rumors that he left three wills, only one has been found. That leaves his fortune to be divided equally between the University of Missouri and the University of Louisville after his two children receive $1 each and their father's "love and affection."

The children, Mrs. R. R. Cannon and Floyd Kinsolving, Jr., were estranged from their father in 1903 when their parents were divorced. They were not reconciled until 1939 when the second Mrs. Kinsolving died at the age of 92.
