

JEUNESSE BUTLER FINDS EASTERNERS STRONG FOR WEST

Many Eager to Live on Coast Is Report of Medfordite After Long Trip.

"A small proportion, naturally, of such cities as Chicago, Detroit, Boston and New York, but all to whom I talked for any length of time seemed to want to come West," reports Jeunesse Butler, who returned during the past week-end from a two-months' business trip to the east and middle west. "And because those to whom I spoke represented such a cross section of the country I believe I can truthfully state that the middle west and even more emphatically, the far east, is looking toward the Pacific coast with more actual longing than, perhaps, ever before."

"One will say, 'that must be a beautiful country out there,' another, 'I'd certainly like to go there some day,' and another, 'if I thought I could only make a good living for my family I'd leave tomorrow.' They speak of the Redwoods, of the forests and streams, of the fishing and hunting, of the wide spaces and the mountains."

"Of our vast distances between cities and states, many actually have no conception. For instance when I told one woman that I lived not far from the California-Oregon state line, she immediately asked me if I knew a 'Mrs. McCullough in Los Angeles.' But our Chamber of Commerce, our newspapers, our visitors to world's fairs, have done much to acquaint the east with the west and bring them closer together, mentally, in mutual knowledge, if not through actual contact."

Comparisons Unkind
"It is usually unkind to make comparisons and perhaps they should be made only for the purpose of appreciating more keenly what we have in the west. I could compare our lovely little Lithia park at Ashland with Central Park, New York; the Pasadena and Portland Rose Shows with the ones they were having on Boston Common and in Fenway park; the precious trees planted not long ago along Fifth avenue with the trees in our own little park and library square; the pears selling three for twenty-five or twenty-nine cents, with our over-flowing lug boxes for only fifty, but the comparisons would be not quite courteous to the east. One Boston business man who has visited the Pacific northwest many times said, 'If there is a heaven on earth, it is that part of the country,' a sentiment which I heard repeated in variety and frequency so many times, that no other conclusion than, that it must be so, could be reached."

"Travel is somewhat difficult, reservations must be obtained far ahead of 'sailing dates'. It is a good time to remain at home, for trains, planes, buses and boats are crowded. La Guardia airport, New York, the largest in the world, is an excellent place for the visitor from the west to get a breath of fresh air and a feeling of wide open spaces. For coolness and quietness, try the caverns of Wall Street. Not much business there these days."

Andrews Boosts West
"Meeting 'Bill' Paisley, music librarian at National Broadcasting, New York for fourteen years, I was told that everyone at NBC knows about Oregon through young George Andrews, formerly of Medford and that when 'the boys' go to movies

they all go to Westerns. "George Andrews, now 25 years old, a protégé of Reinold Warrenrath, Metropolitan Grand Opera star, was heard in concert many times in New York, accompanied by his charming mother, Mrs. Ella Andrews. George is now with the air service at Arcadia, Florida, and has definitely decided against music as a professional career. "It was practically 'Old Home Week' when I visited the Andrews in New York, the Robert Harrisons in Chicago, Mrs. N. V. Bell, her sons James and daughter Aileen Bell Kent in Detroit, Pontiac and Dearborn, Michigan, for all had once lived in Medford and were eager to hear all about everyone. In fact, I carried so many messages from west to east and later from east to west, that I felt like some sort of ambassador of what, I trust, was good will. "The work our Oregon-Washington-California Pear Bureau is doing in its dealer and consumer education concerning our pears is surpassingly good."

PEACE INSURANCE PLAN IS DRAFTED BY MEDFORD MAN

Mr. Frank Drews, Medford inventor and former cantonment carpenter, has evolved a formula for maintaining world peace once the war is won, and he is anxious to have leaders and people of the allied nations start thinking about his plan.

The inventor has had his formula printed and plans to distribute copies to newspapers, civic and fraternal organizations and other groups.

Briefly, he advocates the setting up of an international organization subscribed to by all nations, empowered to enforce disarmament and peace, compel arbitration of disputes, control transportation and communication, institute an international language, a new economic system, regulate commerce and dis-
