ROTARY MEETING IS ADDRESSED BY 91ST DIV. HEADS

Major General Charles Gerhardt, commander of the 91st division and now a member of the Medford Rotary club directed the program of that organization at a luncheon meeting today at the Hotel Medford. Brigadier General P. W. Clarkson, assistant division commander and Brigadier General Edward S. Ott, artillery commander, were guest speakers.

"The 91st will be a tough outfit, one of which Medford and the entire nation will be proud," Brigadier General Clarkson, former Texas A. and M. football star, assured Rotarians. He expressed gratification in the excellent facilities of Camp White and voiced his approval of Medford and the southern Oregon country.

"I'd rather be a victorious private than a defeated general," Brigadier General Ott said in his brief remarks. "We army men want the same thing that every other good American wants—the right kind of peace." Brigadier General Ott, wounded in battle during the first World war, told Rotarians that he "had a score to settle with the Germans—then the Japs."

In preliminary remarks, General Gerhardt reminded Medford people that colored soldiers now in this community should be accorded every consideration and courtesy. He also reminded local people that colored soldiers "die in battle like any other fighting men" and recalled the heroic service of negro troops at Pearl Harbor and Bataan. A quintet comprising colored soldiers of Camp White entertained with vocal selections during the program.
