

MIDDLETON SEES LUFTWAFFE LOSE CHANNEL BATTLE

Sea and Air Fray Eye Witness Tells of Decisive Allied Victory During Raid.

By Drew Middleton
Aboard a motor launch of the Royal Navy returning from off Dieppe, Aug. 19—(Delayed)—(P)—I have just watched the RAF and the Royal Navy smash the Luftwaffe in the fiercest and most dramatic air and sea battle of the war in the west.

For seven hours in the blue skies over Dieppe and on the glassy waters of the channel, Briton and German, airman and seaman, fought for the lives of thousands of American, Canadian, and British soldiers who scrambled ashore this morning to storm the ancient port of Dieppe.

The result was a decisive Allied victory.

Its full measure is not 91 aircraft shot down by British pilots and gunners but a long line of landing craft full of weary but triumphant men now passing our ship.

They are homeward bound because of the magnificent job done by the little ships and great seamen of the Royal Navy and the headlong assaults of pilots of the RAF's Spitfires, Mustangs and Hurricanes.

This combination broke a German force of at least 500 aircraft seeking to blast the Commandos and infantry into submission and sink the armada of landing craft.

Since dawn, when two Focke-Wulf 190's darted at us with machineguns and cannon chattering, this tiny craft and every other ship have been bombed and strafed repeatedly and have blazed back at the enemy.

Dawn Patrol
Our motor launch, which is about 100 feet long, left southern port last night, escorting tank landing craft. The moon was sinking toward the horizon as England dropped astern and the ghostlike line of ships headed for France and the enemy.

As it grew light we discovered scores of other ships—destroyers, motor gunboats, lighters, assault craft and gunboats of the fighting French navy all converging on Dieppe.

The first Commandos landed as we neared the French coast. RAF bombers had sneaked across the channel to hammer German gun positions. Ahead anti-aircraft fire spouted in fountains of red tracer bullets.

Across the water we heard the rumbling crump, crump of big bombs.

As the light brightened we saw six Spitfires flying high overhead. We were still admiring them when there was a roar of planes to port and two Focke-Wulfs attacked our convoy.

They swept over us with every gun firing, and ours answering theirs. One climbed out of the barrage, a second wavered and slid into the sea.

We steamed through the smoke and in the early sunlight saw the burning houses of Dieppe and heard the rattle of rifle fire and the chatter of machineguns.
