

Girl IN WHITE

by WAYNE SPRAGUE

Rilettia Ranier is the prettiest nurse in Stillwell Memorial Hospital, but she takes little interest in men—in fact, is something of a man-hater. When a rich and handsome new intern, Dr. Carleton Ash, comes to the hospital, all the other nurses rave about him, but Rilettia is indifferent—or thinks she is. Then, another nurse, Vivian Snyder, invites both of them to a party and arranges for Dr. Ash to bring Rilettia. On the afternoon before the party, Rilettia finds herself eagerly looking forward to it as she makes her preparations. Her roommate, Lucy Stubbs, accuses her of being more interested in Carleton Ash than she's willing to admit, but Rilettia scornfully denies this.

CHAPTER VII
RILETTIA was nervously pacing the floor of her room. It was nine o'clock, the time Dr. Ash had said he would call for her. Hating herself for her eagerness, she had been dressed and waiting since eight o'clock.

She had had very few dates in her life and, despite the indifference she had expressed to Lucy that afternoon, she had to confess to herself now that she was excited over this one. The handsomest intern in the hospital, and a millionaire at that, was taking her out. The other nurses had made no secret of the fact that they envied her. One in particular, Beatrice Blake had gone out of her way that afternoon to say so. Beatrice was a red-headed, rather temperamental girl whom none of the other nurses liked very much. She had the reputation of being man-crazy and, at times, had made something of a spectacle of herself in her obvious attempts to play up to some of the internes.

"Aren't you the lucky one!" she had said to Rilettia, with a distinct edge to her voice. "Drawing Dr. Ash as your escort to Vivian's party! Stealing a march on the rest of us!"

"Do you call it luck?" Rilettia had responded, with a shrug. "Luck! I should say so! How did you manage it?"

"Oh, it was just an accident, really. Vivian happened to invite both of us to the party at the same time, and so it was quite natural for her to suggest that he bring me."

"So that's how it happened?" Beatrice had been plainly relieved that the suggestion hadn't come from Dr. Ash. "Well, anyway, I still say you're lucky. I'm going to the party too, but no one made any arrangements for a handsome young man to escort me. I guess I'll just have to find my way there by myself."

Rilettia had wondered guiltily whether the ought to invite Beatrice to come along with Dr. Ash and herself, but something had kept her from doing so.

NOW, glancing at the clock on her bureau, she saw that it was nine fifteen. She frowned. What could be delaying Dr. Ash?

Trying not to be impatient, she scrutinized herself in the mirror. The duobonnet velvet jacket which she had borrowed from Lucy looked very well over her dress. Yes, it gave her a very modish appearance. Rilettia had been so sure that she had touched it up a bit. Until she had come to the hospital, she had never used rouge or lipstick, for her mother had disapproved of make-up. Mrs. Ranier had argued that nature's own coloring was far superior to anything that came out of a box or a tube. In those days when Rilettia had spent most of her time out in the open, it had been easy enough to look blooming. Now however, she thought ruefully, things were quite different. Working in a hospital, with little contact with the outside world, she had lost some of her natural coloring.

The hands of the clock pointed to nine twenty and then nine twenty-five. Rilettia began to grow anxious. Could Dr. Ash have forgotten their date? If he was simply delayed, why hadn't he phoned? Maybe he hadn't forgotten, but had just decided to pretend he had.
