

MAIL TRIBUNE IS FAVORITE PAPER AMONG SEA BEES

Among newspapers large and small, from almost every state in America, the Mail Tribune is the favorite of the U. S. navy's "Sea Bees" stationed on an unnamed island in the Pacific ocean constructing bases and installations for our war against Japan.

So writes Jack E. Murray, former vice-president of the Southern Oregon Title company who on March 3 enlisted in the naval construction battalion and is now stationed on one of these United States bastions in the Pacific.

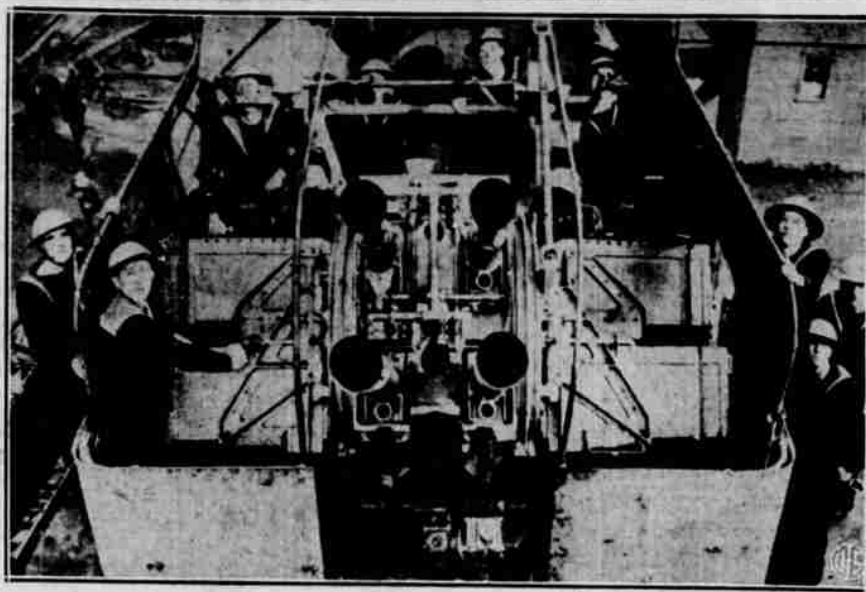

In a letter to a brother, James Murray, Jack relates that the "Sea Bees" all receive their home-town newspapers and after reading them thoroughly exchange them with their buddies for a further purview of the news. The Mail Tribune, he writes, is rated "the best of the lot because of its excellent and compact coverage" of all sorts of news, and because of its fine features. Jack writes the Mail Tribune, in the opinion of the construction battalion members, has the "best news coverage" of any of the other papers received on the island.
