

Orsen Welles' "Magnificent Ambersons" on Craterian's Screen Today

PULITZER PRIZE NOVEL PORTRAYS INDIANA FAMILY

Joseph Cotton, Dolores Costello, Tim Holt in Cast—Opens Today.

Marking Orsen Welles' second screen venture, "The Magnificent Ambersons" presents a vivid panorama of some 25 years in the life of an Indiana town, with such noted players as Joseph Cotton, Dolores Costello, Tim Holt, Anne Baxter and Agnes Moorehead in its principal roles.

The film, which opens a three-day run today at the Craterian theatre, adheres closely to Booth Tarkington's Pulitzer prize novel in its story of the rise of one family and the fall of another, with dramatic complications stemming largely from the spoiling of an only son, and his subsequent wrecking of his mother's life.

The action begins in 1885 when Isabel Amberson, daughter of the town's foremost citizen, jilts Eugene Morgan to marry Wilbur Minafer. Their son, George, grows up to be an arrogant young cub while Eugene's daughter, Lucy, becomes the belle of the town. The Amberson fortunes dwindle as the community grows away from Amberson properties, but Eugene, a pioneer in the automobile business, prospers. After the death of their respective spouses, Eugene and Isabel renew their old romance, but George harshly breaks up the impending marriage, compels his mother to refrain from even seeing Eugene again, and not until after Isabel's death does he realize the wrong he has done her.

How the boy attempts to make amends forms the dramatic climax of the picture, which Welles produced and directed.

Joseph Cotton, who played Jed Leland in "Citizen Kane," has the role of the kindly Eugene and Miss Costello that of the far too indulgent Isabel, with young Holt in the part of her spoiled son and Miss Moorehead as her scheming sister-in-
