

BALKAN INVASION DUE NEXT SPRING IS ALLIED VIEW

Roads Impassable After
Nov. 1 — Turkey's Aid
May Bring Complications

Washington, Oct. 6.—(U.P.)—Officials recently returned from Turkey said today that the allies would not invade the Balkans this fall, but that when they do—probably next spring—neutral Turkey may join the fight against Germany.

A Balkan offensive this fall is impossible, according to these officials, because Balkan roads—most of them little more than trails—will be impassable for motorized equipment after November 1. Germany's invasion of that area was in the spring.

Complications

But an allied offensive next spring with Turkish troops at the side of British and Americans may precipitate another diplomatic situation with the Soviet Union, observers predicted. They pointed out that Soviet Russia always has considered the Balkans her sphere of influence. Historically, Turkey has felt the same way because of the long reign of the Ottoman empire over that area.

Turkey and the Soviet Union, consequently, have been more or less suspicious of each other's aims. Russia's century-old desire for an outlet to the Mediterranean, through the Bosphorus and the Dardanelles, also conflicts with Turkey's determination to maintain control of those strategic straits.

There have been reports for some time that Turkey's desire to have a place at the peace table—to counteract Russia's probable demands in the Balkan and Aegean area—probably would force her to abandon her neutral status and join the United States. A high United Nations official revealed last month that the United States and Great Britain were supplying Turkey with military equipment for eventual use against Germany.

Turkey Weak

The sources who predicted that Turkey would join the allies in the Balkans said that there were two other factors that might prevent any immediate action: Turkey's weakness in military equipment which would make her entrance into the war at an inopportune time more of a liability than an asset, and the present proximity of German air bases to Turkey.

But there is no doubt of Turkey's position—solidly on the side of the allies, it was said. German influence in Turkey is now at a low ebb, according to these reports, the people and government preferring the United States and Great Britain to either Germany or the Soviet Union.

LAST CIVIL WAR VETERAN BURIED

The services were presided over by Major Reese, post chaplain of Camp White. Interment was made in Mountain View cemetery, where military honors were given by a firing squad from Camp White.

In 1869 he made the over-land trek to Oregon, driving by ox-team to Redding, Calif., and walking on. When he reached the Rogue River valley he made his home with his brother, Zenas Howard. In 1873 he enlisted, and served throughout the Modoc war, after which he went to Burns, Ore., where he lived for 45 years. He retired from business in 1930 and returned to Ashland to live.

The deceased was unmarried. Survivors include three nephews, Charles B. Howard, Ashland; Harvey Howard, Keno; and Walter Howard, Ashland; a niece, Alice Howard Parker, Ashland; several great nieces and nephews, and others.

SCU TALENT ON ROTARY PROGRAM

Members of the Camp White service command provided entertainment for the Tuesday luncheon meeting of Medford Rotary club at the Hotel Medford, with Staff Sgt. Don Safford's troupe supplying the songs and skits. Mark Goldy was program chairman and Arthur Cannon presided at the meeting in the absence of Club President Allan Perry.

Capt. Kenneth Luckey, public relations officer at Camp White, spoke briefly of the formation of the 1943-model army, pointing out that the service commands fulfill the duties of "landlord" for the fighting units and public relations officers act as liaison between the army and civilians. Questions dealing with the scope of Camp White's service command were answered by Capt. Luckey.

Staff Sgt. Safford, Irish tenor and master of ceremonies, took over the program after Capt. Luckey's brief address. Musical numbers and skits, from the sublime to the ridiculous, were presented by Safford, Corp. Bob Carrick and Corp. Joe Mills, with Joanne Riesch, assistant to the director of service club 2, as accompanist.

SEPTEMBER SET NEW RECORD FOR VALLEY WEATHER

September of this year was the warmest September ever recorded by the Medford weather bureau since it was established in 1911, according to W. J. Hutchinson, meteorologist in charge of the bureau. Strangely, the record breaking month followed the second coolest August since 1911.

Average temperature for the month was 70.8 degrees, while the nearest that figure was 68.8, average for September of 1935. September 8 registered 102 degrees, highest temperature of the summer season, and 100 degrees on September 23 was the highest temperature ever recorded that late in the season, the previous record being 98 in 1942. September 14 the thermometer rose to 101.

Highest temperature ever recorded for a September day was 104 degrees on September 2 in 1934.

Rainfall for the month was below average, but .04 inches of precipitation having been recorded, .61 inch, than normal for the month. September is the first month of the rainfall season for the purpose of records.

Mr. Hutchinson pointed out that the month had been fine for harvests, the warm, clear days permitting uninterrupted work.

ANNIVERSARY OF OUTPOST MARKED

The Officers' Outpost celebrated the first anniversary of its opening Saturday night. During the regular Saturday night dance and program at the center, a large birthday cake with one candle was cut and served to the officers and hostesses present.

The outpost first opened as a recreation center for enlisted men and last spring after the opening of the large new USO building on Riverside the Outpost was converted to the use of junior officers, officers wives, WAC officers and army nurses. Among activities scheduled for the Outpost each week are a class in social dancing each Wednesday morning at 11 a. m. and a class for rhythmic exercise Friday mornings at 11 a. m. for officers' wives. The classes are conducted by Mrs. Katlan, former New York City dance instructor.

Thursday afternoons of each week are set aside for the weekly bridge luncheon.
