SCHENCK HELPED INCOME FAKE IS CLAIM OF BIOFF

New York, Oct. 8.—(U.P.)—How Motion Picture Executive Joseph Schenck, who later had income tax troubles of his own, helped a gangster fake his income was told today in the federal court trial of eight Chicago mobsters and a Newark labor leader charged with extorting $1,000,000 from the Hollywood industry.

Willie Bioff, convicted extortionist and the government's star witness in the trial, which involves the International Alliance of Theatrical and Stage Employees (AFL), testified that in June, 1937 he swapped $100,000 cash for a check from Schenck.

"I want to get a good farm," he said he told Schenck, adding that he was afraid to because of "what my income might look like."

Schenck then helped him fake his income records by trading him the $100,000 check which he deposited in his bank so that he could appear in need of money. Because of later "publicity," he said, he never did buy the farm.

"Publicity," he said, also caused his official resignation as George E. Browne's aide after the latter, also a convicted extortionist, was re-elected president of the IATSE in 1938 at the spring convention in Cleveland.
