He Will Inherit the Peace

You have pledged this little boy a brave new world. They are the symbol of your hopes and aspirations, the heir to democracy's victory and the Four Freedoms.

They stand hopefully waiting for the guns to be still, waiting for that world where there will be enough food, enough sunshine and laughter.

All over the world the children are waiting. Children are starving in Occupied Europe. They are war orphans, homeless, hungry, in the bombed cities of England, Poland, China, Russia. Even in our own country deadly juvenile delinquency is rising steadily. These children everywhere need your help and need it now.

With the world in flames and in tears, the demands on genuine American Hearts have been infinite. When the fires of London are so thick the fire hoses run dry . . . when a Chinese mother has to watch her baby die for want of a simple drug . . . when Greeks by the hundreds drop dead in the streets from starvation . . . when a home town war orphaned kid starts playing with fire . . . decent Americans cannot close their eyes or turn their backs.

The way to help is to support your war chest. No dollars you spend will ever go as far. There is no other way you can, in one gift, help our fighting forces, our Allies, and our home front agencies.

So when you're asked to make a pledge, think of these little children, waiting for tomorrow.

It's the old Western Spirit

In the days when automobiles buttoned at the back, the town of Burns, in Eastern Oregon, was true frontier. Its art museum was the desert sunset. Coyotes furnished its symphony. And the Burns Garage, hard by the blacksmith shop, was as frontier as its community.

Now, the frontier teaches people to be neighborly. The latch-string is always out. Your neighbor helps with the round-up. Your wife helps when the neighbor's wife has a baby. People get along because they give so many things that money won't buy.

So it was perfectly natural that Standard of California, an old Western outfit, should haul gasoline in 5-gallon cans over 150 miles of rugged wagon-road to supply the Burns Garage and its few early-Ford customers. It's doubtful that there was much money in it.

But this frontier neighborliness held a profit—in human relationships. Today the Burns Garage would reflect credit on any large city. Stride for stride, its town has advanced, too. Today the Burns Garage—and its community—stick by Standard of California. They remember that, when the going was tough, Standard stuck by them.

So, you see, we know from experience—this one and many parallels—that it's a good thing always to look beyond the money involved. That's our policy in these days when war-problems hold for everybody more bumps than any 150 miles of wagon-road. We're doing our best to help.

Our war-work must come first. But more than ever, we're trying to do business in the way Standard learned as an integral part of the earlier West. Our guide is the old frontier spirit—in modern dress.
