

MILITARY FORCE TO KEEP PEACE IN RESOLUTION

Sen. White Interprets Pending Peace Resolution as Embracing Suppression.

Washington, Oct. 26.—(U.P.)—Sen. Wallace W. White, R., Me., one of the framers of the senate's pending peace resolution, today interpreted its "power" clause as embracing the possibility of military force to suppress future aggression.

White voiced his interpretation of the admittedly vague resolution in an exchange with Sen. Claude A. Pepper, D., Fla., one of a group seeking to write "military force" into the statement of the senate's postwar foreign policy.

Acceptance Urged
White urged that the senate accept the resolution without amplification or any attempt to particularize ways and means of carrying out its objectives.

Pepper asked White if he thought that "international authority with power to prevent aggression and preserve the peace of the world" meant creation of an international police force.

"The future must answer to that," White replied. "But, if we are to do the job effectively there must be military force."

Pepper asked White if he believed the committee resolution "fairly informs the senators that this international authority embraces such a police force."

"It does for me; I cannot speak for the other members of the Foreign Relations committee," White answered.

Advice Not Asked
White added that President Roosevelt, charged with the responsibility for treaty negotiations, had not asked the senate for its advice on the subject. He protested that attempts to particularize would "step into the President's prerogatives and tell him to follow the senate and not his own discretion."

The group of young senators who seek a more specific commitment than contained in the pending resolution had promised to continue "heckling" its sponsors for definitions of its terms.

Last Act for 'The Great Peters'

These two photos show the end of a famed circus performer, "The Great Peters," who died of a broken neck in a plunge from the top of a St. Louis arena during the annual Firemen's Thrill Show. Death was instantaneous when the elastic rope failed to withstand the shock of the 125-foot drop.

Front Page Ads In London Tell Story Wartime Britain

By James McGlinchey

United Press Staff Correspondent

London (U.P.)—Like the good newspaper that it is, "The Times" of London paints a vivid picture of a nation at war on its front page—but "The Times" does it without using a single news item or a solitary picture.

This neat trick is accomplished not with mirrors, but with advertisements — help wanted, personals, legal notices, the announcements of birth, deaths, marriages.

Without headlines, bylines, or cut-lines "The Times" front page presents a queer appearance to Americans, used to having their news in eight-column streamers. But the orderly rows of ads tell the story of wartime Britain better than most high-powered staffs of writers could.

Certainly no frontline story of heroism in battle could be more poignant than the simple, dignified notices in the "On Active Service" column, such as:

BRETT-JAMES.—In August, 1943, killed in action in Sicily. Lieut. John Ivor Brett-James, beloved younger son of Major and Mrs. Norman G. Brett-James, Ridgeway, Elstree, Herts, aged 21.

Just as anywhere else in Britain everybody is trying to buy something he can't get, or sell something else something he doesn't want—a tale told abundantly in the "For Sale, Hire and Wanted" columns.

MORE TIME GIVEN STRIKING MINERS

(By United Press)

The War Labor board gave union officials additional time Tuesday to end the coal mine strike, and in Alabama almost 20,000 miners remained away from the pits.

While a slight back-to-work movement developed at Alabama's commercial mines, the walkout at the steel industry's captive pits was aggravated. All but one of the captive mines closed again when several hundred miners at two pits of the Republic Steel Corp. reported for work, milled about the entrance and then decided to go home.

An estimated 37,000 miners were on strike in six states. While the mine walkouts disrupted coal production, union leaders at Chicago notified President Roosevelt of their decision to conduct a strike vote among 350,000 operating employees of the nation's major railroads.

Officials of the five operating railroad brotherhoods telegraphed the president their rejection of a four-cent hourly wage increase.

"TALK ABOUT MILEAGE!"

Test car drivers in the Mojave Desert learned plenty about the new GENERAL from American-Made* Rubber

Yes, General's test car drivers know the score. They kept accurate mileage records on the new General from American-Made rubber... as they went, around the clock, over blistering desert roads.

Under the hot noonday sun and in the cold of desert darkness... through that peculiar, tire-destroying dust... these men kept at it to see how long these Generals would last.

It's not the kind of test you'd put a tire to, but it proved, beyond question, that the General, with American-Made rubber, delivers the kind of performance that originally built General's reputation for mileage and safety.

But—Tires Are Still Precious

Because military needs come first—there are only a few civilian tires being made. There is still a tire shortage. So, until the time when everybody can have this new General, our earnest advice is to make your present tires last. Let us help you... with recapping, repairing, mileage advice... at Quality Tire Headquarters!
