RHEUMATISM
Rheumatism has caused much intense suffering. Although this condition has attracted medical attention for years, a great number still suffer today the intense pain and misery resulting from this disease. Many causes for rheumatism have been given. Experience has shown that it is one of the more important of diseases. There are many types of this disease, and its complications and results are far reaching. Probably the latest theory as to its cause is that it is an allergic manifestation to a group of related organisms. But even with this theory it is conceded that there is a related background. But regardless of theory there is improper cellular elimination. Overcome this and you have health. There is no better way of improving the circulation and producing normal nerve function than by natural treatment.
