250 HOMEMAKERS ATTEND CANNING DEMONSTRATION

More than 250 Medford homemakers filled the courthouse auditorium to capacity yesterday to hear Mrs. Vivian Freeman, canning specialist of the Kerr Mason Jar Company and Miss Marian Farrell, home demonstration agent, give pointers on home food preservation. Mrs. H. O. Colburn, chairman of the Jackson County Nutrition Council, sponsoring agency for the series of demonstrations, introduced Mrs. Freeman.

The audience was most enthusiastic in its response to the more recent innovations in canning methods. Mrs. Freeman demonstrated the hot pack method of canning fruit, especially adapted to peaches, pears, and other large fruits that oxidize readily for it helps to retain the original color of the fruit and makes possible a sweeter tasting product, using less sugar than usually thought necessary. Mrs. Freeman reports that she has had 1243 men, women and children make a taste test of fruit canned by various methods and that 97 per cent of them prefer the flavor and texture of this hot packed fruit.

Other food preserved at the meeting included tomatoes to demonstrate the cold pack, hot water bath method and beets to illustrate use of the pressure cooker on non-acid vegetables that require higher temperature for proper sterilization.

Mrs. Freeman emphasized the importance of having at least one inch of water above jars in the hot water canner to assure proper penetration of heat and sealing of jars.

Miss Farrell discussed preparation of fruits, vegetables and fowl for the cold storage lockers and urged each person who uses the method to follow reliable instructions which are available free of charge through the county Extension office.

Mrs. Freeman and Miss Farrell, and the County Nutrition Council expressed their appreciation to local business organizations who assisted in promoting the program.

Mrs. Freeman added, "The homemakers of Jackson county have shown that they are 100 per cent behind the efforts to strengthen the home front by preserving food at home to allow commercial pack for army and lend lease uses."

And He Walked Away From It!

COOL WEATHER AIDS WATER CONSERVATION

The present spell of cool weather is beneficial to crops and irrigation prospects for late summer and early fall, Watermaster Clinton Smith reports. He further states a good rain now, and another, as usually comes in mid-August, will lessen moisture worries at the end of the season. The current brand of weather is also conserving water in reservoirs by lessening evaporation, keeping the ground moist, and maintaining the stream flow. Watermaster Smith says farmers in his area have a cheerful view over crop prospects, and that the agricultural value outlook is good.
