

POLL AT COLLEGE SHOWS VETS MORE INTENT ON WORK

Indiana University Survey Indicates Veterans Are Anxious for Useful Study.

Bloomington, Ind.—(U.P.)—Indiana university officials predict that men in military service whose college educations were interrupted by the war will return to the campus when the war ends more seriously intent on fitting themselves for jobs in the shortest possible time.

The officials based their prediction on the results of a survey taken in a poll of the discharged veterans now on the campus. Dean Wendell W. Wright, poll conductor, said the men also believed that the government should help them.

Change Courses
According to the results, 80 per cent declared they were interested in vocational courses such as business, education, medicine, law and dentistry. Of the 80 per cent, 62 per cent were taking such courses when called into military service.

Thirty-eight per cent of the men said they had changed from their originally contemplated course of study.

Few of the discharged servicemen said they were experiencing any great difficulty in readjusting themselves to the change from military to civilian student life. They said the main problems they found were changing from the discipline of military service to civilian freedom, getting back into study routine and getting used to being out of uniform.

Favor Speed-Up
Without exception, the men said they were returning to the university with more serious intentions than before they went into the army or navy.

Two-thirds of them favored continuation of the accelerated war program because it would enable them "to get to work sooner, to catch up on time lost and because of age."

Some of the men felt that the government should help them finance their interrupted college studies as compensation for time lost while in military service. A few objected to receiving governmental assistance "as a gift."

receives an average of two calls for legal aid and it is not uncommon for the letters to come from opposite sides of the globe. Recently the daily mail brought a letter from New Guinea and also from Florida. The serviceman in New Guinea wanted to protest his real estate. The serviceman in Florida wanted to divorce his wife because she had not written him in several weeks. "Besides," he wrote in a disgusting vein, "I have a report that she is running with a sailor."
