Hardening of the Arteries
Hardening of the arteries, arterio-sclerosis, is a disease of the arteries resulting in the loss of their elasticity. There is a general or localized thickening and hardening, and the cavities of the arteries become smaller. Consequently they cannot carry, under all conditions, their normal amount of blood. The parts supplied become under-nourished and receive a diminished supply of oxygen. The old saying "A man is as old as his arteries" is fundamentally true. The arteries of one man at the age of 40 years may be physiologically older than those of another man at 60 or even 80. Tobacco, alcohol, rich foods, muscular and nervous tension are given as some of the causes. Correct by the natural way any conditions or abnormalities of structure producing this defect of the arteries and live longer.
