GOOD IRRIGATION SEASON IS ENDED

Watermaster Clinton Smith reports the irrigation season ended in Jackson county October 1, and by and large it was a good water year, better than the March and April forecasts indicated. The situation was helped considerably by rains in June.

The rains of the last week-end averaged close to an inch throughout the county and started fall range grass and freshened up pastures. In some districts it caused creeks to rise and it also put the first snow of the year on Mt. McLaughlin. The peak is now fairly well covered. Snow also fell last Sunday on the higher levels of the Dead Indian country.
