Pilotless Plane Is Forecast By Radio Official

Chicago, Oct. 6. — (U.P) — A pilotless plane, equipped with a "collision-prevention" apparatus that will fly to its destination automatically guided by radio, was predicted today by Ralph R. Beal, of the Radio Corporation of America in an address before the national electronics conference.

"In the field of post-war aviation, electronic means for controlling a plane and connecting the controls of the plane into guiding radio systems so that it may fly to its destination automatically are entirely feasible," Beal said.

He invisioned a collision-prevention apparatus which would indicate obstructions and afford ample warning for changing the direction or elevation of the plane to avoid a crash.
