Pilot Downed "Somewhere In Hell" Rescued After Wandering 45 Days

By Jack Guinn
United Press Correspondent
New Delhi, India, Oct. 13—(U.P.)—From "somewhere in hell" a native runner came, bearing a note to an army intelligence officer: "Somewhere in hell," it read. "I am the pilot who crashed. I need a pair of G.I. shoes, quinine, socks, cloth, sulfa for boils and infections rotting my limbs off. I'd like to borrow a blanket, if you can spare one. Cigarettes would be nice. I'm ashamed for asking for so much. Thanks for whatever you can do."

That self-effacing note, injected with apologies for causing his buddies inconvenience, was written by Lt. Greenlaw M. Collins, New Orleans, La. It caused two rescue parties to leap into action to save him from death in a particularly treacherous north Burma jungle bordering the famous hump of China, a labyrinthine denseness from which no American ever had emerged before. Collins spent 45 days there. He came out, but as a living skeleton.

He was weak, sick and hungry. During a month and a half of wandering aimlessly in the tangled foliage, he had resorted to eating leeches for food. He had served as human meal for parasitic insects. He had converted his socks to gloves to keep the insects off his hands, and at night had removed his undershirt, wrapped it around his head and face, then replaced his leather helmet. But it didn't do much good. And he wanted a cigarette—badly.

Collins had parachuted, without weapons or provisions, into the jungle July 29, after his fighter plane had gone into a spin. His note reached army officials Sept. 6.

Two rescue parties went into action, one traveling by water and land, the other by air. The air group set out after Lt. William F. Diebold, Pittsburgh, Pa., a glider pilot, had parachuted into the jungle carrying a walkie-talkie.
Miraculously he found Collins and called for medical personnel to jump to Collins' aid.

VETERAN SEABEE TAKEN BY COPS

Berkeley, Cal., Oct. 13—(U.P.) A dozen police officers armed with a machinegun and tear gas safely captured a veteran seabee early today whose personal "ammunition dump" they had confiscated on the complaint of his wife that he was "going to shoot the place up."

Held in the police station for the federal bureau of investigation was the seabee, Ernest Pfaffenheser, 32, just returned from service in Italy and France, and his store of weapons—a German machine gun and rifle, 200 rounds of ammunition, two live German grenades, a jungle machete and assorted knives.

His wife, Irene, 30, told police that Pfaffenheser, back from the wars Monday, had left her yesterday morning "to go on a date with another woman."

Last night she returned home to find things "in a heap" and discovered firemen had extinguished a small fire during the afternoon.

BONG REGAINS TITLE OF TOP SCORING ACE

Allied Headquarters, Southwest Pacific, Oct. 13—(U.P.)—Maj. Richard I. Bong, Poplar, Wis., P-38 Lightning fighter pilot, again has become American.

His note reached army officials Sept. 6.

Two rescue parties went into action, one traveling by water and land, the other by air. The air group set out after Lt. William F. Diebold, Pittsburgh, Pa., a glider pilot, had parachuted into the jungle carrying a walkie-talkie.

Miraculously he found Collins and called for medical personnel to jump to Collins' aid.
