TONS OF MAPS HELP ALLIES IN INVASION PLANS

New York—(U.P.)—Sixteen million maps weighing more than 100 tons were in allied hands before a soldier set foot on Normandy on D-day, Col. Edgar W. Barbisch, army engineer for the New York district, revealed in a recent address to graduating engineers at New York university.

There were battle maps as large as 2½ inches to the mile, and for the invasion beaches the charts were scaled 12 inches to the mile, Col. Garbisch revealed. There were profile maps of beaches, with tidal charts so carefully reckoned that it was possible to locate the exact spot a landing craft would touch bottom at any time of day, he said.

The herculean mapping task was cleaned up by army engineers, who discovered early in the war that the only available maps of northwestern Europe dated back to Napoleon's day. Working on the military truism that good maps win battles and poor maps lose them, the engineers put 600 beaches "on paper."

Having charted the actual and hundreds more potential courses to Berlin, the army engineers pitched into the job of getting there, Col. Garbisch told his audience.

Olive Barber's Observations

My son laughed at me, over some of the funny little notes and letters I'd written my mother as a child and which she'd saved and lately returned to me. But I'll get back at him by saving some he wrote when he was six or seven. Then in time it will be his son's turn to laught at him. For the boyish scrawl went, so far as I could deciper, like this: "Dere Grandma: I gust got bak from Sundy school. Are techer give us eetch a litle candy rabut and a ester egg apeese. I am not goin to eat the rabut for a long long time but the ester egg is krakt so I can eat it. We kild our liv rabut and Donald woodn eat any becos it was a pet."

Of late, my mother often sends little things she's saved for sentimental reasons. She feels her time with us grows shorter.

Dad, 85, is ten years her senior but figures he's going to live to be an old man; just no sense in making up a body's mind to die young, like mother has! Yet personally, I like mother's placing in my keeping some article or paper which she feels should be, of increasing value as the grandchildren and great-grandchildren come along. I accept these almost as a sacred charge. It's a feeling about "family" I think most women have though I've seen few men who did, so far as I could tell.

The term "red coat" was a hateful word through my school days. Yet here is my English great uncle Oliver Chapman wearing, in his picture, the scarlet coat of the British soldier! His round little pillbox cap is set at a cockey slant, the band holding it in place evidently being held with his teeth, for the picture so shows it. His red coat is buttoned to his chin and the dark trousers have wide light bands down the outside. His attitude, I have to admit, is definitely swaggering; white glove in hand, his head held at an arrogant angle—well it is no wonder brother James, standing beside him is made a little pompous by such a finely turned out relative. Pouter-chested, the pair of them!

Our English relatives were either too poor or too lazy to pay their taxes so great-grandfather's will bequeathing grandmother White Horse Inn at Tilbrook and the Fox and Hounds at Easton was a nice but futile gesture The crown got it long ago. But the will made nice reading to the fifth generation; and has helped fill this column!

Thanksgiving Feast For 95 Per Cent Of U. S. Armed Service

Chicago, Nov. 1—(U.P.)—More than 95 per cent of all the men and women in the armed forces, including those held prisoners by the enemy, will have an old-fashioned Thanksgiving dinner Nov. 23, Col. H. R. McKenzie of the office of the quartermaster general, said today.

The Red Cross already has taken steps to get processed turkey, packed into 12-ounce cans, to prisoners of war in Germany by way of Switzerland and to those held by Japan via Valdivostock, he said.

Elsewhere soldiers and sailors will consume 60,000,000 pounds of turkey, including 8,000,000 drumsticks along with all the trimmings, McKenzie said.

Butter and chocolate treated by the army so that it will not melt in 110 degree temperatures will be included on the holiday menu in tropical climates, he added.

Goering Had Hunch Reds Were Coming Into East Prussia

Moscow, Nov. 1—(U.P.)—Reichsmarshal Hermann Goering had a premonition or something three weeks before the red army broke into east Prussia.

So, reports a front correspondent for the Russian newspaper Trud, the portly number two Nazi hurried to his east Prussian estate in the Romminten forest and removed all his valuables.

Goering, an estate guard told the Soviets, cut pictures from their frames, piled his possessions into 15 trucks and rushed back to Germany, blandly assuring his groundkeepers and the neighboring Prussian villagers that east Prussia was invulnerable.

The Goering lodge formerly was owned by the Hohenzollerns and was used by the late Kaiser Wilhelm II and Field Marshal von Hindenburg.

Russian troops now are living on the grounds.
