Grants Together Again

(NEA Telephoto)

Actor Gary Grant and his wife, the former Barbara Hutton, make this smiling two-some as they appeared at San Francisco performance of Army Air Force show, "Winged Victory." This is first picture of couple since their reconciliation.

Olive Barber's Observations

Until he'd joined the navy, he'd been a night club entertainer. Everything about him bore witness of his profession—his easy social manner, his ever ready repartee, his endless flow of wise cracks. He had, I thought, the ultra in what we think of as city sophistication.

Though just thirty, he was married for the second time, he told me. His first wife had been a professonal dancer. They'd had no trouble, but never being together, one day they both realized each had grown indifferent to the other. They separated. Then he met Paula.

He couldn't understand what Paula saw in him. Paula had her master's degree while he had never finished high school. Getting a job in a night club one vacation, it was found he had a natural flair for that type of work and so he kept on with it.

He and Paula had a little girl now, just 9 months old. His mother cared for the baby while Paula wrote dramas for radio. When the war was over, he and Paula were going to have an act of their own; she would write it, he would put it on.

I said with his wife's training and his experience, maybe the two of them could put it on together. He hesitated and then said Paula was a little shy before the public. I wondered at this, considering her background but he offered no explanation.

We were on the bus at the time and he said I would get to meet his wife as I changed to another bus at the town where she was to meet him. Every time he mentioned her name, which was as often as he could manage, his voice was prideful, loving.

Ae we stepped off the bus he exclaimed, "There's Paula!" The girl must have seen him for she started toward us, but seeing I was with him, she stopped. I thought, "She's just the type I'd thought his type would marry," for she might have been a Vogue model. I can't go into the details which made her seem so but she was the last word in dress, hair-do, general appearance.

And when I understood her hesitency in meeting the public for as we drew near, I saw one of her eyes was sadly affected; surely without sight. And when she finally spoke, her speech had the blurred sound of one whose palate was not fully developed.

Yet the loving pride there had been in the young man's voice as he'd introduced hed to me! "My wife!" he'd said, and there had been a vibrancy in his tones I'm very sure the beautiful dancing wife had never evoked. Some marriages, it came to me, are so free of earth bondage you get the feeling that the union was planned when the stars were young. Their's, I knew, had been such a marriage.
