HOOD RIVER VETS SAY DUAL STATUS CAUSE OF JAP BAN

Hood River, Ore., Dec. 6—(U.P.) The Hood River American Legion post today cited the alleged "dual citizenship" of persons of Japanese ancestry born in the United States as one of the reasons for striking the names of 16 Japanese-American soldiers from its war memorial plaque.

The names of the 16 Japanese-American soldiers serving from Hood River county, some of whom are overseas, were removed from the plaque last Wednesday. The action brought sharp criticism from the Portland, Ore., Council of Churches and the American Civil Liberties union.

The legion post passed a resolution, at a meeting of the post, saying "that the names of the Japanese should not be included on our memorial plaque until they have completed their tour of service, and/or a decision by competent authority has been rendered on their dual citizenship."

A spokesman for the legion said the group understands that any Japanese born in this country is registered in Japan, and that the Japanese government pays $25 to the parents of any boy born here.

The resolution asserted, "It is impossible for our government to differentiate between loyal and disloyal Japanese," both alien and American-born, and that the evacuation from Pacific coast areas of these persons was to further the security of military and naval operations.

Olive Barber's Observations

Mail-bag: "After reading your column on getting stuck in a hotel room, I just had to write you about an experience my husband and I went through, which included not only getting stranded in a hotel but some other things I'd like to forget.

"We were riding along in a truck when suddenly our brakes gave way on a down hill slope and the truck leaped into the bank like a big mechanical jack rabbit and came to rest bottom side up. The fire extinguisher hanging over my husband's head had come down and bopped him; a gallon of turpentine just back of the seat had spilled down my neck.

"I came too, sitting atop my husband and saw blood flowing over his shirt front. Examination showed this came from a cut ear, not a severed juglar vein. I figured no one had ever bled to death from a cut ear so I tried to shake him back to consciousness. A crowd gathered. Did you ever notice how, when an accident occurs, a crowd can gather in nothing flat out of thin air! We had to climb through the top of the car and though I weighed 180, I riz like a bird and piled out.

"An enormous old German gentleman stood near. He had a 'German goiter' and a walrus moustache. He kept patting me on the back and saying, 'Vos iss dis! Vos iss dis!' I leaned my forehead against his big tummy until the earth quit whirling.

"After the truck was righted we coasted back into Spokane. My silk stockings were riddled, my hair in strings, my husband's shirt was torn and bloody. Every one looked at us as if they were thinking, 'What a party that must have been!'

"After we'd cleaned up as well as we could, my husband said we might go to a show while we were waiting for the truck to be fixed. We did but soon the warm air of the theatre began to bring out the fumes of the turpentine in my suit and people around us moved as far away as they could. You seem always to be getting into such messes so I thought I'd write and let you know that you haven't all the bad luck."

B-29 CRIPPLED WHEN JAP PLANE HITS IT HEAD-ON

Headquarters, 21st Bomber Command, Saipan, Dec. 6—(U.P.) A Japanese fighter crashed head-on into a Superfortress six miles over Tokyo, knocking out one engine and bringing a swarm of enemy planes down on the "cripple," but the big bomber shook them off and finished out the 1,500-mile homeward flight safely.

Pilot Lt. Donald J. Dufford, Grand Junction, Colo., was bringing the Superfortress in over Tokyo on its bombing run Sunday when the Japanese fighter, with a dying pilot at the controls, rammed into the B-29.

"Our bombardier immediately took charge of the forward guns and my co-pilot released the bombs," Dufford said.

"The Jap came right into us. He closed so fast I hardly realized what happened. I must have pulled the Superfortress' nose up, because I remember thinking about doing that."

The bombardier, 2d Lt. Joseph Hankoff, Baltimore, Md., said he saw his tracer bullets ripping into the Japanese flier's cockpit just before the collision.

The crash ripped away part of one Superfortress engine and the nacelle, and then the Japanese fighter's right wing whirled by Sgt. R. V. Rainier, Goresbeck, Tex., in his tail gun position, smashing the right gun blister as it passed.

The rest of the enemy plane tumbled over and over until it plunged into another Japanese fighter trailing the B-29 by about 250 yards. Both ships burst into flames and exploded.
