Australian Women Guard Searchlights
On the crest of a coastal mountain in Northern Australia, a group of Australian servicewomen man an anti-aircraft searchlight battery and mount their own sentry over the installation. These searchlights have not had to pinpoint Jap raiders since the girls took over but they have swung into action on several occasions to lead in battle-weary fliers who have lost their bearings. During the height of the Japanese invasion menace to Australia, there were 98 enemy air raids on the Australian mainland.
