Olive Barber's Observations

The two little boys in the home where I'm now staying make life in many ways as it was before our two sons became grown men. I guess little boy behavious never varies from generation to generation. Watch a pair of youngsters for a day and you've seen how all other children are behaving everywhere.

Bobby, the five-year-old, never washes his face except under the sternest compulsion. Just why small boys are allergic to water on the face I've never been able to understand. They'll wade through a dirty puddle on the coldest day. If they have to break ice to get to the water, so much the better. But then that's their feet; try and get them to wash in even tepid water and they'll howl like little banshees that the water is so cold it's turning them into icicles. One appeal of the ice on the puddle is the noise it makes when they break through. Any activity to a boy gains in value if it makes a racket; the more racket, the more value.

Most boys will go swimming at every opportunity, though they prefer to go without the consent of adults. You might say they favor a black market dip to a legal one. And it's my belief that getting boys to take a bath would not be the battle it is were bathing prohibited. If bathing were outlawed and a lad had to sneak up on the bath tub, that's all it would take to make cleanliness popular with the little renegades. A realistic note to the farce would be to trounce the non-bathing violator ever so often. I bet you that would create a bull market in bathing in less than a month.

Philip, the older boy in this home, is learning to play the trumpet. When the teacher urges that he study the great masters in music, he makes for the stack of magazines he's saved which have given space to Maestro Harry James.

Philip also has a paper route. Due to his own peculiar business system, this enterprise costs his parents money. When they bitterly comment on his bookkeeping technique, he listens politely but continues with his free interpretation of arithmetic. He also listens most politely, but does nothing about it, when his mother tells him to wear his rubbers; brush his teeth; quit jiving The Rosary; shut doors; comb his back hair; keep his hands out of the pockets of his new jacket.

Yes, I've re-entered the democracy of little boys; a democracy where Parent Pressure Groups seldom succeed in setting up the dictatorship to which they futilely aspire.

Mice Blamed for Shortage

Topeka, Kan. (U.P.)—No, mice didn't drink the gasoline, but they did check up 1,200 gallons of gasoline stamps, B. J. Hopkins told an OPA commissioner here recently, in explaining his inability to account for a shortage. But Hopkins, not the guilty mice, got the suspension order from Commissioner J. Donald Gunn, ordering him to suspend gasoline sales for 60 days, and staying all but 14 days.
