Olive Barber's Observations

• • •

The youngsters were being served dinner when I arrived at the Children's Orthopedic hospital here in Seattle. Superintendent Thompson turned out to be very different from the mental picture I had of her. A little on the plump side, her blue eyes twinkled merrily and had the jolliest way of crinkling at the corners; even her nose sort of twinkled, laughter wrinkles forming across its bridge. The stiffly starched white uniform which would have looked austere on any one else, wasn't so on her. It's swish and crackle was a low chuckling about her as she went from bed to bed where children were eating from trays; when she stopped at low tables where children were well enough to eat family style; when she stooped over weirdly trussed up little figures lying on their stomachs and eating as best they could from dishes tucked under their chins.

Nothing so natural as child behavior and so there was no pretense in their joy at seeing her approach. One of the attendants told me in an aside that it is always so, though she pass among them many times a day.

The room whose curtains and walls were festooned with gaily disporting rabbits was, of all things, the one where anesthetics are given; given not in the familiar breathed-in- manner but through the rectum. With a rag bunny clasped to its breast and with other bunnies being funnily acrobatic on the walls, a child just slips off to sleep, unfrightened by masks and strange odors. All hospitals are kind to children but here was a special sort of kindness; one coupled with wisdom and understanding of childish minds.

Approaching a ward containing children who had been severely burned, the superintendent said she called these the war casualties, for many had been burned through being left alone while mother worked or when they had been left in incompetent hands. "Children don't have to be bombed and strafed to be made casualties of war," she said, the natural gaiety of her face absent as she told the histories of some cases.

One ward held six little Eskimo patients flown in from the far North just a few days before. In another ward were several boys enough recovered to rough-house the place. Pillows had been thrown; books tossed about. Though she was stern before them, when away she said it was good when a boy got to acting normally. Oh she knew what normal boy behaviour was all right!

The hospital is helped by many organizations but most of all I like to think of the women who met and made those jolly rag rabbits to the end that a little child might enter the lonely way to healing a little less lonely because of the bunny he held in his arms.

CHUNGKING SAYS FOE SEES SOUTH CHINA LANDINGS

Chungking, Jan. 29.—(U.P.)—A Chinese communique said today that Japanese forces who have been strengthening their garrisons along the south China coast in fear of possible allied thrusts had made landings along the Kwantung coast east of Hong Kong and pushed inland.

Troops came ashore from warships at Pinghoi, about 50 miles east of Hong Kong, and advanced about 13 miles inland to Hoifong.

The communique said Chinese troops defending a hill position in the suburbs of Shaochow (Kukong), about 100 miles above Canton, killed 700 Japanese before they were themselves killed to the last man. The Japanese in this area are striving to close the last Chinese-held gap on the Canton-Hankkow railway.

Bitter fighting was reported raging in the suburbs of Shaochow, which lies on the railway.

The Communist newspaper, New China Daily said today that north China guerrilla fighters have entered Japanese held Manchuria and that Japanese troops burned a number of villages in Jehol province on suspicion of harboring guerrillas.

1940 LIVING HIT

Monterey, Cal., Jan. 29.—(U.P.) Postwar return to a standard of living as low as 1940 will be "national suicide," Col. Alexander R. Heron, California director of the reconstruction and re-employment commission, today told delegates to the third annual five state conference of United Steelworkers, C. I. O.

The average shipment by air express today travels 1000 miles. Air shipments average 26 lbs. in weight.
