SINUSITIS CARE
Many people who have sinusitis are under the impression, they should take more milk. Their reason for taking more milk is to supply calcium. If you have sinusitis and take more milk, the chances are that your sinusitis will become worse. You may or may not need more calcium; it is certain you do not need more of the mucous forming element found in milk. Instead of more calcium it may be that you need more vitamin D, or even some other vitamin. If it is calcium you lack, the leafy vegetables, whole wheat bread and fruits may supply your needs, as they contain quite a little calcium.

GENEVA RULES GO UNRECOGNIZED AT INTERNMENT CAMP

Civilian Internees Suffer From Malnutrition As Japs Slowly Cut Food Supplies

Robert Crabb, a member of the former United Press staff in Manila, was interned at Santo Tomas University with his wife and two children when the city fell in 1943. In this dispatch he describes how the Japanese systematically starved the allied civilian internees, now liberated by Yank cavalrymen.

By Robert Crabb

Correspondent

Santo Tomas internment camp, Manila, Feb. 5 (UP) — The Japanese slowly starved the civilian internees of Santo Tomas after announcing that the rules of the Geneva convention and International law "are not recognized here."
Men, women and children suffering from malnutrition often heard food vendors crying their wares outside the walls.
Army internees were unable to walk without stumbling. Cases collapse became routine. People dropped unconscious on stairways, in halls, in chow lines.

Started Year Ago
The starvation began last February when the Japanese army took over the camp and announced that army regulations would apply to the internees thereafter.
From that time on malnutrition dogged the camp. Before that we had been able to save it off by outside purchase of food at high prices.

At that time we were getting an average of 1,300 calories daily. This dropped to 1,000 last November. In the last three weeks it fell to 700.
Many times during the past few months my daughter and I collected potato peelings and other vegetable peelings and boiled them to make broth.
Fortunately I had planted a number of banana shoots around our shanty. These shoots provided us with bulk, if not nutrition, during the last two months.

Five Trees Eaten
We have eaten our way through five trees, which had not reached the fruit bearing stages.
The dodges we used to fool our stomachs were almost incredible. We ate every meal with teaspoons while reading the most difficult books we could find. This made the interval before the next meal as short as possible.

We lived in a shanty I built myself on the grounds. It was only ten by 10 feet. There we cooked, ate, slept and rested. We left it as little as possible in order to preserve our strength.
About half the people in the camp have swollen joints and know the advancing stages of malnutrition.
Dr. Theodore B. Stevenson of the camp medical staff was jailed by the Japs for insisting on including the word "malnutrition" on death certificates.
Child Suffers
We prepared strange dishes, which can be found in no cook books. In order to take as long as possible to get meals ready, I grew used to hearing my daughter say after every meal: "Mommy, will there be supper today?"
She received an adult ration, but it was necessary to divide her food into three helpings and serve them separately to make her think she was getting more. She became irritable and cried and whined. Three months ago I managed to buy—for $300 two bunches of immature bananas which had considerable food value and bulk. When they were well boiled, they tasted like potatoes.

Our daughter was born in interment.
Three months ago, my wife gave birth to a seven pound, ten-ounce son. At that time her health remained excellent, but on the very day of the birth, our hoarded stock of food ran out.
Our family since then has been living on a diet of roots, a few vegetables, and meager rations issued by the Japanese.
When she left the hospital after the birth of our son, my wife weighed 125 pounds. She dropped to 90 pounds and now is back to 101. A year ago, she weighed 132.
