The biggest dollars in the world

From a long, long bombing strike, weary airmen return. On an island dot in the Pacific, a Red Cross girl greets them with lemonade and a smile. That smile is something money won't buy.

At a Red Cross blood bank, a father bares his arm. Almost certainly his gift of blood will save the life of somebody's son. That's something money won't buy.

So it goes with all the activities of the American Red Cross... scattered over the earth... quite too many to count. To millions of boys in uniform they mean things that money won't buy. Yet the Red Cross runs on money. Right now, it's asking us all to chip in at least 200 million dollars—"must" expenses for another year.

The Red Cross runs on money because it, too, must pay the rent and buy groceries. Money gets that Red Cross girl to her sunbaked atoll. Money sets up that blood bank. Money makes possible the machinery by which the Red Cross carries to our fighting men the things money won't buy.

Your gift-from-the-pocket makes possible all those gifts-from-the-heart which are the everlasting core of Red Cross—the sacrifice of women volunteers in thousands who are often ready to drop but never quit... the service of those paid Red Cross workers whose total performance is so far beyond the call of duty... those gifts in real blood and real sweat so numerous their donors could form an organization called Americans Anonymous.

Your gift of dollars makes possible these other gifts of things money won't buy. Those gifts of things money won't buy make your Red Cross dollars the biggest dollars in the world.

Ex-Foreign Worker

YMCA Speaks in Medford Tuesday

Wilbert B. Smith, who lived for many years in India and Egypt where he was a YMCA worker, will be in Medford tomorrow to speak at a high school assembly, 9:55 a. m., and to the Rotary club at the regular Tuesday noon meeting. The speaker was a member of the Cairo Rotary club while serving the association in Egypt. Smith's co-workers in the YMCA consider him one of the association's most outstanding men and it is stated that through his work in Egypt he was considered an outstanding figure in both religious and social welfare work. Smith first went abroad in 1904, going to Poona, India, and served in India and Egypt almost continually until returning to this country in 1941 to serve on the World Service Home Base staff of the association.
