TONSIL DIATHERMY

Of all these newer methods over which I have had so many and such enjoyable controversies with the self-constituted "spokesmen," "readers" or "prominent members of the medical profession, the diathermy or electro-coagulation treatment of enlarged and infected tonsils has made the slowest progress. There are two reasons for that, I believe. First, the telling argument of the old fossils in the nose and throat field—that the diathermy method doesn't get all of the tonsil but leaves some tonsil tissue in the throat. That is true, but the "specialists" or the "surgeons" who use it to persuade the unwary patient to submit to the major operation (tonsillectomy) are either ignorant of the pathology of the trouble or dishonest or both. Except in rare cases of malignancy there is no good reason why we should even attempt to remove every bit of tonsil from the throat. Doctors who use this argument betray their quackish character—they pretend to know what of course they do not know.

The other reason why tonsil diathermy has not yet superseded the atrocious guillotine and snare operation is that it requires considerably more skill than tonsillectomy does, not only technical skill but skill and patience in managing patients, and not every doctor has such ability. Tedious is the word for tonsil diathermy work—tedious for the doctor at any rate. And so your busy "specialist" prefers to run you into the hospital, go fishing with his snicker-snee, take out everything that gets caught in the snare (including portions of throat muscle in many instances) and be done with it. Chances are you'll get over it all right. If you do have serious hemorrhage or something those are the breaks, brother. After all, I am not quite unique, I do know or know of a reasonable number of doctors who not only use the methods I recommend but have much the same views as I have. But if or when I recommend such a doctor to a correspondent, the correspondent must be satisfied with the mere mention of the doctor's name. In no instance shall I name any doctor as one who shares my views. Too many good doctors do not.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Big Noise Coming
I am twenty-six and expecting my first baby and full of nervousness but my doctor lives twenty-six miles from here and he is so overworked I hate to detain him with my questions. (Mrs. O. B. V.)
Answer—Perhaps many of your questions are answered in "Preparation for Maternity" and "The Brady Baby Book." For either send ten cents, twenty cents for both, and enclose stamped envelope bearing your address.

Redolence
My father and I thank God that you sent us Dr. Brady's name (physician skilled in injection treatment of hernia and hemorrhoids). All our family read your column and find it always interesting and helpful. I can't agree with your idea that bathing once a week is enough—working in an office and just can't help noticing B.O. sometimes and one can't take a chance of having it. (A. S.)
Answer—Have never suggested that bathing once a week is enough. Bath as often or as rarely as you like—it has nothing to do with health. Every time I receive a letter from a pleuro patient of your doctor's—and I have had scores of such letters—blush. It reminds me that some years ago I branded his associate or predecessor (now deceased) a quack because he, too, save patients such treatment. At that time I was as sure as a lot of old fog predictions are today that hernia and hemorrhoids could be successfully treated only by operation in hospital.

Paralysis Aglians
After 35 years of practice I am handicapped by a beginning case of Parkinson's syndrome. I would be grateful for a copy of your book on this disorder. You are doing a fine work and you have my best wishes. (M.D.)
Answer—The pamphlet is on the way. Doctor I know one oculist who operates successfully for cataract despite his Parkinson's disease. His nose and throat specialist who performs many nose and throat operations despite his tremor. Don't let it get you down. (Copyright 1945 by John F. Dille Co.)
