HAVE NO POINTS
TO FEED PARLEY

Hotels Apologize for Food
Muddle—OPA Promises
Relief.

San Francisco, April 21 — (U.P.) — San Francisco restaurateurs were highly embarrassed to admit it, but they confessed tonight that they had no idea what they could feed the delegates to the United Nations conference on International organization.

Like the average housewife, the hotels did not have enough points to take care of company and said the Office of Price Administration contended it could not issue additional points without revision present regulations. Point-free foods, such as poultry, could not be substituted, hotel spokesmen said, because they could not be found on the market at OPA ceiling prices. They claimed the unrationed foods were disappearing into a "vigorous black market."

The Hotel Employers Association of San Francisco made a public apology to the conference delegates for the lack of "palatable foods" on their menus.

"We feel the public is entitled to an explanation in order that the embarrassment which the city will suffer during the conference will not come as a complete shock," the association said in a newspaper advertisement. "We regret that such a situation exists in a city noted for its fine hotels, but we have exhausted all of our resources to meet the present crisis."

In addition to the advertisement, the members of the association appealed to their congressmen.

The National OPA Headquarters, which promised to send an investigator to look into the situation, said it would make sure that public eating places in San Francisco would have ample food for the Unclo. It did not announce, however, whether extra points would be issued or additional foods supplies shipped to San Francisco.
