By DR. WILLIAM BRADY M.D.

Readers should address inquiries to: Dr. William Brady, 265 El Camino Beverly Hills Calif.

SCLEDERMA (HARDENING OF THE SKIN)

I consulted many doctors who did not recognize my condition. They thought it might be Raynaud's disease, adrenal gland trouble, gout, etc. Finally I entered a hospital for two weeks' observation and study and they decided I had scleroderma, which is a rare disease.

Dr. Brady has given me courses of injections or "shots" with no apparent benefit. My skin, especially on arms, chest and legs became brown, rough and dry. In the hospital they made a skin biopsy to confirm the diagnosis, and informed me that the skin contained no calcium. They were unable to account for this lack of the normal amount of calcium in the skin in view of the fact that I was reared on a farm and have always included in my diet plenty of milk, cheese, etc., containing calcium.

That describes scleroderma as well as the medical books do. The condition is a mystery to physicians.

I hesitate even to mention it in this column, lest some readers infer I pretend to know something about it that other doctors do not know or that I purport to be an "authority" or a "specialist."

Now if I had scleroderma I'll tell you what I'd do: 1. I'd keep my daily intake of common table salt well above the average — by selecting various salty items for my diet and by taking a good pinch of salt along with drinking water, especially when the weather is very warm.

I repeat, I don't know the cause of scleroderma and these suggestions are merely my vague notions about it.
