PUBLIC LIBRARY SAID TOO SMALL FOR POPULATION

When the Medford public library was erected in 1912 it held but 2,815 volumes compared to 38,000 at present according to E. Fay Woolsey, librarian, who commented this week on the proposal of the city council to remodel and enlarge the building. One of the six propositions to be voted on at a special election June 12 is that of a bond issue of $102,000 for the library enlargement. Circulation in 1912 was 26,727, Miss Woolsey's figures show, for a population of 8000 persons, while the 38,000 volumes now owned by the system are serving an ever-increasing population with a high peak circulation of 220,000 already attained. "We feel that post-war days will bring increased demands in all fields but especially in science and technology and that these sections especially should be expanded," Miss Woolsey states. "There is great need for increased filing space for magazines, pamphlets and documents to make possible better reference service."

A report of the library committee compiled recently stated that space is so limited in the library building that new volumes cannot be added without discarding an equal number of older ones and that the heating system and lighting system are greatly in need of modernization and the entire building needs repair and renovation.

Last attendance check showed an average daily attendance at the library of about 350 persons.
