

Navy Tells Daring Exploit Of Sub Attack On Jap Ships

Washington, June 7—(AP)—The navy revealed today the daring exploit of a U. S. submarine that sneaked at night into a harbor jammed with Japanese ships, surfaced under the muzzles of enemy guns and torpedoed vessels all about it, then got away in a miraculous exhibition of broken-field running.

It is the sort of thriller with which boys' series books about war are filled but which sound too incredible really to have happened.

This episode was real enough, however, and earned Cmdr. Eugene B. Fluckey of the submarine Barb the medal of honor and his entire crew the Presidential unit citation.

Jap Haven Entered

Here is the story: Fluckey had long suspected the existence of a geographically concealed haven, otherwise unidentified by the navy, which hid a large number of Japanese fighters, tankers and munitions ships.

It was a dark night, with poor visibility, that Fluckey found his target. A large number of auxiliary Japanese ships were in an anchorage behind a protecting screen of escort vessels which were concentrated on every logical approach. The water was so shallow that an attacking submarine would have to remain surfaced during its approach and for at least an hour afterwards.

Still, anchored there in the harbor was one of the best targets ever presented by the enemy. Fluckey decided to attack despite the heavy odds.

His danger-laden escape involved flight through uncharted waters filled with mines and rocks and a route packed with fishing junks. But he figured the Japanese escorts would hesitate to make a run through the rocks and would find the fishing junks a handicap.

Presently, the Barb moved inside the screen of Jap escorts. She let go with all the torpedoes she could in the time available, gave full right rudder and moved toward the rocks at full speed.

Ships Erupt

From the bridge of the surfaced ship, Fluckey could see Japanese ships erupting in the night like a nest of volcanoes. Columns of fire leaped from several vessels. The first target settled in the water. Some of the vessels hit were obscured by others burning in the line of vision.

Only the Japanese now know how many ships went down that night. Fluckey had no time to stop and count. Japanese escorts came in hot

ASHLAND PLANS EFFORT TO GET VETS HOSPITAL

Ashland, June 7.—Ashland today is offering its ideal climate, healthful elevation and many other advantages to the government in a bid for the veterans' hospital which the Veterans' Administration has stated it desires to build in southern Oregon or northern California.

Telegrams were sent today by the city of Ashland through Mayor Wiley and by the Ashland Postwar Planning Council to Oregon senators and congressmen, requesting that Ashland's advantages be presented to the Veterans' Administration and that that organization be asked to investigate local sites before any decision is made.

Medford, Klamath Falls and other places are also bidding for this veterans' facility, but Ashland leaders feel that, since Roseburg has its Veterans' hospital, Klamath Falls the Marine base and Medford Camp White and since Ashland has all the elements required for such an institution that the Veterans' hospital should be located in or near Ashland.

Redding is the main applicant from California for the Veterans' Hospital, with a site near Shasta lake having been proposed for the hospital.

Ashland was once considered for a hospital, but no action was taken on it at that time. A brief, outlining the many suitable sites in the Ashland area, will be submitted to the proper authorities before the question is decided, leaders stated today.

WINCHELL'S DAUGHTER ELOPES WITH VETERAN

Hollywood, June 7.—(AP)—Columnist Walter Winchell today revealed the elopement of his 18-year-old daughter, Walda, and art student William Lawless, 29.

Winchell, here to cover film colony news events, said he congratulates Lawless on "scooping" him on the New Jersey marriage.

Lawless was recently discharged from the signal corps with the rank of staff sergeant.

HOOVER PRAISES TRUMAN WORK IN FOOD SITUATION

Choice of Clinton Anderson As Secretary of Agriculture Said "Wise Step."

Chicago, June 7.—(AP)—Former President Herbert Hoover praised President Truman today for taking action to remedy what he called a "terrible muddle in the domestic food situation."

Mr. Hoover said the President had taken a "wise step" in appointing Rep. Clinton P. Anderson, D., N. M., as secretary of agriculture. He commended Mr. Truman for his plan to consolidate the War Food Administration with the department of agriculture.

"But the most hopeful part is that we have a new regime tackling the problem," Mr. Hoover told a press conference. "Everybody wants the President to succeed."

Rumors Denied

Mr. Hoover denied rumors that he would accept a governmental post in connection with post-war food relief. In answer to a question, he said:

"Bear in mind that I am soon going to be 71 years old. I was 47 when I had the food job in the last war. My position in the world is that of an adviser."

The former president said he had just left Washington, where he had engaged in a discussion of our domestic food situation and the relief of the liberated countries of Europe.

Black Markets Blamed

Mr. Hoover said the principal muddle "is local famines over the country due to maldistribution and black markets."

"Still a further evidence is a 30 per cent decrease in the hog population at a time when we ought to be increasing it," he added. "The American hog is our principal source of fats. Fats are second only to bread as important foods."

When asked the reason for the decrease, Mr. Hoover replied, "it would take me two columns to answer that," and then added: "You can control prices but control is far different from freezing prices. You can control water going into the city mains, but if you freeze the water, you will get nothing. That is one cause of the trouble."
