AHI AHI BETTER LEAVE IT TO THE DOCTOR

I wrote you some time ago asking what to do for my prostrate trouble and you kindly sent me a pamphlet giving valuable information and advice. Among the remedies you said might help was washing the bladder. I am..... years old and have had this bladder trouble. Please tell me what chemicals or medicine to use, what size tube and how often.

use, what size tube and how often.

If I mentioned washing the bladder at all, sir, (I can't find it in the pamphlet, but then, I can't take time out to go through the thing carefully) I meant, of course, that your physician might administer the irrigation or bladder wash. If your physician considers it advisable he can instruct you in the method, but it would be inviting trouble and serious trouble, if you were to attempt it without such instruction.

Title of the pamphlet is "Bladder Trouble." Copy will be mailed to any man on request if he provides stamped envelope bearing his address. More particularly it deals with bladder trouble developing in men past middle age, not every disease of the bladder or disturbance of bladder function, just the trouble that comes with gradually increasing obstruction from enlargement (hypertrophy) of the prostate, around the neck or outlet of bladder.

Richard Roe, let's call him, aged, I should say, 66, was finally going down hill. You could see the man coming week to week. He complained... Then he resumed where he had left off, and at first looked rather a sad sack. But thereafter day by day you could see the man coming back. "Tell me, Dick," I finally gave in to curiosity, "just which vitamins are you taking—or what dentist installed your new teeth?" Then he explained. He had undergone transurethral resection—removal of the portion of enlarged prostate that obstructed the outlet of bladder through the urethral passage or canal, without external wound. "And, boy," he exclaimed, "these nights I'm off directly after I hit the corn-husks, and I put in eight solid hours of sleep without the slightest disturbance! Why didn't somebody tell me about this long ago?"

I didn't remind him that I would have been glad to tell him about it had he asked me. But it has been a source of gratification watching the man regain his joy of living—although I had nothing whatever to do with it. I mean I feel a kind of vicarious pride in the great advance the urologists (physicians who limit their practice to diseases of the urinogenital organs) have made in the treatment of this obstruct-

Olive Barber's Letter

Maybe you have been making the same mistake I have been making. Maybe we have both been short changing our hospitality because there is no longer time in which to prepare for this with old time thoroughness. In the old days, to invite friends to dinner meant much more than the preparation of the meal. It meant windows must be shining, their curtains freshly laundered. Woodwork must be spotless and the whole house in apple-pie order.

All my life I've felt that truly, "the ornaments of a home are the friends who frequent it." But of late there has been an unhappy lack of these because, as I explained, I hesitated to invite friends to a home so uninvited, often actually dirty, judged by old standards.

But the other day I reached the limit of my endurance of this self-imposed isolation. So I just up and said to a group of friends, "I'm starved for a good visit with you. So won't you turn blind eyes to the dingy windows, the kittens' ears under the bed and the dust on the piano and see only the welcome on our faces? There won't be much butter and very little sugar, but come anyway."

They did and the women later confided to me they had limited their own hospitality for the same reasons I'd been limiting mine—they no longer had time to prepare for guests as they had been accustomed to prepare.

You should have heard us talk! The homey talk of women the world over, when they get together and let their hair down. How salads refuse to eat salads, though salads contain vitamins obtained in no other way. And now that school was out, what to do with the children was surely a problem. And I heard that Dick had up and married Mabel, though he knew his mother would have a fit! We giggled joyously over this triumph of young love. We giggled over anything. We were together.

All the dishwipers were dirty but I unraveled a flour sack. I felt pretty grim over this evidence of my lack of housewifery, but the new freedom required some sacrifice. I did not apologize.

One woman wanted a copy of a certain magazine I take. We pawed over the magazines piled on the table, then those stacked in a corner. Finally found it under the bed. When I returned that woman's visit, I plan on asking her for a certain recipe, hoping she'll eventually find it in the medicine closet or under the bread box.
