NOT ACCORDING TO HOYLE

From a mid-western village or town of perhaps 2000 population comes this important letter from a schoolboy — and I wonder whether there is still any special advantage in being born and reared in a small town or village, now that time and distance mean so much less than they meant when I was a boy in Canandaigua:

Dear Sir: We have been studying about the teeth in Hygiene class at school. We have read your article "Brushing Isn't Harmful to the Teeth." In it you stated that you know and teach that brushing doesn't save the teeth or prevent decay of the teeth.

I would like to know what you would recommend. We found that article in the National Geographic Magazine that you referred to. . . Nov., '38, number, article by W. Robert Foran describing condition of the teeth of inhabitants of Tristan da Cunha. . . but we can see no connection between those people and us. Their diet most likely makes up for the lack of brushing their teeth.

Our seventh grade Hygiene class would like a reply as soon as possible.

Yours truly,
Charles Henry James
(let us call it)
