RAWLINS—To Mr. and Mrs. Earl W., 808, Apt. 4, Jackson St., June 18, 1945, a boy, 7 lbs., at Sacred Heart hospital.

LEWIS—To Mr. and Mrs. Bob, 408 Park avenue, June 17, 1945, a girl, 9 lbs., at Sacred Heart hospital.

BATCER—To Mr. and Mrs. R., 501 North Oakdale, June 14, 1945, a girl, 9 lbs., at Sacred Heart hospital.

Chicken? Egg? They both come first

Did you ever stop to think what a lucky break it is for everyone that Uncle Sam can hum a war-time variation of a Mother Goose jingle: Higglety pigglety, My fine hen, She lays eggs for Fighting men!

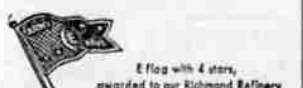

Actually, America's fine hens go farther and do more than that. They lay eggs enough that—after three and a half years of war—civilians don't know what it means to be completely without them. This obviously isn't all happenstance. Think of the countries where eggs have become as rare as the ham to go with them. Somebody deserves credit.

Fried chicken is a mighty fine dish. Fricassee is nice, too. Some folks insist nothing's so good as boiled chicken and dumplings. Not was—is! After long months of war, chicken is both service "chow" and the great unrationed favorite of the American table. Again, somebody deserves credit.

So let's give a cheer for the poultry raisers—large and small. They've responded to war responsibilities by boosting egg and poultry production utterly beyond comprehension. Can you, for instance, imagine four billion dozen eggs? Careful—you almost broke one!

It's difficult, even, to get a conception of this industry—made up not only of large growers but of countless small units. Yet, if you think of America's vast wheat lands, the growing grain, the reapers and threshers and everything connected with wheat-growing—you're thinking of a comparable industry.

The world's oldest question is: which came first, the hen or the egg? The poultry raisers have answered that one—for America. On America's war-time food lists both are firsts.

BIG TURKEY CROP SEEN IN COUNTY

County Agent Robert G. Fowler says reports received by him the past two weeks indicate the turkey crop of Jackson county the coming season will total 150,000 birds, double that of last year. Buyers and growers have indicated to him the output would be that large, the agent states.

It has also been learned that one California poultry dealer firm has financed 75,000 birds in this section and expects to get that many more from other growers.

Last week the last of the brooder turkeys of this area were slaughtered and shipped south. The county agent says the army plans to can most of these birds, and has contracted for purchase of a goodly portion of the new crop.

Weather conditions have been excellent for the turkeys the past months, with good forage.

CHERRIES APPEARING IN VALLEY MARKETS

Odd varieties of cherries, including a few pie cherries have started to ripen in the valley, Assistant County Agent C. B. Cordy reports. It will be a couple of weeks before the Royal Annes, Black Republicans, Lamberts and Bings will be ready for market. The cherry crop is lighter than last year, but there is a good set.

The warm weather over the week-end gave impetus to haying and many farmers mowed Sunday. In several sections neighbors are meeting the labor shortage by helping each other.
