AMINO ACIDS
Much has been said about calories, minerals and vitamins, but very little attention has been given to amino acids. These are not only important but essential for good nutrition, resulting in life, growth, and repair. There are nearly twenty amino acids required in the diet for proper nutrition. Most of the amino acids must be obtained from the diet, while a few may be made in the body from more complex amino acids. These are not acids in the popular sense. Some of them are in reality alkaline in effect on the blood and body tissues. The amino acids are so essential in our body chemistry that we cannot maintain our physical organism in a state of perfect health without them.
