IT CAN'T BE HOME WITHOUT CHILDREN
The proposal that childlessness should be taxable after three years of barren marriage is based on the assumption that any person who is physically, morally and financially qualified or fit to begin raising a family. It is fair and reasonable to permit a newly married couple to enjoy exemption from such taxation for three years. After that they should pay an annual tax of approximately one-tenth of their income until such time as they have a child or adopt one. All revenue from this source is to be distributed by the state as a bonus, subsidy or an endowment to parents of young children and persons having adopted children.

It is a more or less recognized principle of practice to put the newly married couple on three years' probation, so to say, before even considering the possibility of a barren marriage. This is a sound rule to follow in all ordinary circumstances. If conception has not occurred in that time, then, and only then, is it fair or advisable to seek medical advice. For in such event, it is reasonable to assume that (1) the marriage has not been consummated, (2) the husband is sterile, (3) the wife is sterile, or (4) both are sterile.

Mind, now, this does not imply that anybody is at fault or anything is wrong if conception fails to occur in three years, or in six years, or even in ten years. I had a letter a short time ago from a woman who was very happy—she had finally been blessed after fifteen years of seemingly barren marriage. Nature is capricious sometimes.

Another fact to keep in mind is that human beings are only relatively fertile; that is, man or woman may be absolutely sterile, feebly fertile or highly

Germany Blasted and Burned Beyond Belief By Big Bombs; City After City Only Rubble

Inside Germany, June 26—(U.P.)—Conquered Germany has been burned and blasted beyond belief or recognition. Fifty per cent of the buildings in the greater cities have been knocked down or burned. Many cities are a shambles far into the reich, miles beyond the range of our artillery or the areas reached by ground troops before Germany surrendered. The bridges, the cities, the great industrial plants lie in broken rubble.

Beneath the ruins of German buildings lie tens of thousands of bodies. Through the streets of these dead cities plod bomb-punchy men and women. Only the little children seem always to be gay and happy. Spatz' bombers rarely attacked cities. They were assigned specific plants—a refinery, a still works or plants turning out parts for planes and submarines. In the light of day with their planes clearly visible the youngsters who manned these ships took them into box barrages of flak which literally darkened the sky with their puff balls of black smoke. With the precision bombing developed to obtain accuracy at a height of three or four miles the Forts cut Germany's battle power down by destroying the plants which supported her armies. RAF by night, USSTAF by day. It was discouraging to the enemy.

Nazis Went Underground
But Spatz and many other top officers here know that the Germans showed us a thing or two in the way of opposing or avoiding bomb attacks on industry. American and British fliers broke the back of the Luftwaffe. But the Germans dispersed their plants. Some of them went underground. Some went into the woods. Some operations were carried on in thousands of private homes. If victory had depended on putting a permanent stop to the manufacture of German airplanes the Allies probably would have lost the war. The alternative was to wreck Germany's industrial plants so that she could not wage war. Best bet was to smash her oil refining facilities.

RAF at Night
Operating at night, RAF bombers plastered the cities. It was the RAF more than USSTAF which accounted for the wreckage of German towns. RAF technique was to come over the city target in the darkness. The British had devices which could locate the center of a big urban area with sufficient accuracy. Over the target the RAF let 'em go great 8,000 and 12,000 ton bombs. The blasts were terrific. Germany's cities died that way.

USSTAF bombed by day. British fliers scoffed when Spatz arrived in England in June of 1942 to set up the first American air force to strike at Germany. The British had tried daylight bombing at the outset of the war. Conplacent Germans told me about that when I visited Germany in 1941. The British came over on a few daylight raids and were murderously turned back by a combination of fighter opposition and great concentration of flak.

Day Raids Opposed
By the time Spatz and his first bombers arrived the RAF was on an exclusively night time schedule. One of Britain's top airmen greeted Spatz with this question: "How do you propose to operate general?" "We're going to bomb 'em by day," Spatz replied. "Go ahead and get your nose

Nobel Prize Winner Admits Pro-German Sympathy In Trial

Oslo, June 26.—(U.P.)—Knut Hamsun, 85-year-old Nobel prize winning novelist, admitted pro-Nazi sympathies today when he appeared for preliminary hearing on charges of collaborating with the Germans.

The court at Grimstad in south Norway ordered Hamsun held for trial Sept. 22. He appeared to be ill and almost deaf. Questions to him had to be repeated many times.

Hamsun told the court that "many good people" belonged to the Fascist Nasjonal Samling party, and admitted he had Nazi leanings long before the invasion of Norway. Under questioning he said he would not deny connections with the Germans, "as I know many others are trying to do."

Woman Acquitted Of Slaying Cruel, Brutal Husband

Cascade, Ida., June 26.—(U.P.)—Mrs. Thelma Stonebraker, 31, today had been acquitted of the murder of her 52-year-old husband, George Stonebraker.

The slight-built, attractive brunette won the acquittal from an all male jury in district court here Saturday night.

Mrs. Stonebraker was accused of firing two shots into her husband while he slept in a chair in the living room of their ranch home last April 2.

The defense built its case around assertions that Mrs. Stonebraker feared her husband because he was a "cruel and brutal man."
