DISTORTION
Health and energy come from within. These result from normal processes. Normal nutrition is basically the most important of these processes. In case of structural distortion normal nutrition is impossible. The structural distortion is of three types. It may be a soft tissue distortion, or a bony distortion. But the more common type is a combination of these two types. No machine will work properly, if at all, if its parts are not in normal relation. Then, why should we expect the human body to function properly if its structures are not in normal relation to each other? Then the natural thing to do in case of disease or sickness is to have the proper structural adjustments for the relief of your discomfort and to provide for the release of that healthful energy from within.
