WHY EVERYBODY IS DOWN IN THE MOUTH

More dentists per thousand population in the United States than in any other country in the world. Scale of living higher in the United States of America than in any other country. More soap (dentifrice) and tooth brushes in the U. S. A. per thousand population than anywhere else in the world.

Presumably the people who buy the merchandise brush their teeth more carefully and more frequently than do people elsewhere. And finally we North Americans (inhabitants of the entire continent) or 99.9% of us at least, have poorer teeth than the civilized inhabitants of any other continent.

The dentists have a word for it, pyorrhea. Pyorrhea adveolaris is chronic suppurative (pus-forming) inflammation of the parodontium, that is, the alveolar process of the jaw bone, the lining of tooth sockets and the gum.

Other names for it are chronic atrophic alveolitis (long-enduring inflammation of tooth socket or sockets with the structures and shrinking of the structures involved), Riggs' disease.

Patients frequently complain that Dentist A diagnoses pyorrhea and Dentist B finds no sign of pyorrhea. Such hair-splitting merely goes to show that pyorrhea (to use the most familiar name), like arteriosclerosis (hardening of the arteries) and chronic arthritis (rheumatism), is not a disease with a definite onset but a condition one may regard as degeneration which progresses insidiously and progresses gradually, so that no dentist or physician can give more than his individual opinion that the individual hasn't the trouble today but has it next week.

Degeneration in this sense means deterioration in which function is impaired or lost and the living tissue cells are replaced with inert fibrous material, scar tissue. This retrogressive process is commonly known as atrophy, which means wasting.

In fact, dentists apply the term atrophic gingivitis (gingival pronounced jinjival, means pertaining to the gums.) to chronic recession of the gums to the tissue.

Some dentists, such as Louis I. Grossman, D.D.S., D.M.D., in a chapter on mouth diseases in Cyclopedia of Medicine, Surgery and the Specialties, Vol. 10, '43, even attribute this extreme thinness and recession of the gums to "over-brushing of the teeth". Now, that, I submit indicates how sadly muddled and confused most dentists and physicians are about pyorrhea or whatever you prefer to call the degeneration process in jaws, gums, teeth.

I hope no reader will infer that I think I know more about the question than run-of-the-mill doctors and dentists do.

All I know about pyorrhea is get from what I read in the letters I get from patients, doctors and dentists and in the medical and dental magazines and books and, of course, what I dream up out of thin air.

So I hope dentists, physicians and people will take what I say in these talks about pyorrhea as nothing more than one man's views and accept, reject or try to refute them, as you please. At any rate it can do you no harm to read these little squibs when there is nothing better within convenient reach.
