Rockford, Ill., Sept. 11.—The old home-town is pretty groggy. A severe "polio" epidemic and the end of the war form a combination that is hard to take.

A banker friend here showed us a check just received for $60,000. It was from the National Association to fight infantile paralysis with headquarters in New York—the third one for the same amount received to date.

A new stunt was tried here. Opinions differ as to its success. The entire town and environs were sprayed with DDT from airplanes, raising Cain with the insect life, and according to Aunt A., doing no good to dogs and cats.

Everyone here seems to believe about as everyone else does elsewhere. The present depression—Rockford really has a mild one now—will not last more than four or five months to be followed by a grand and glorious boom.

We are always a bit skeptical of optimistic judgments which are so unanimous, but grant there are factors to support such a belief. We hope for the sake of some of our old friends here in the manufacturing business that is the way it pans out.

Two of our old friends here have had strokes since our last visit. A third is the doctor in attendance. The trio deserves a write-up for each in his own way is exceptional and all are perky and amusing in spite of the misfortune.

All are past the three-score and yet one might think were still boys at prep school the way they carry on, and rag each other. Fortunately, all of them are far above the subsistence level and can have anything they really need or want.

One of them has had a little cabin built in the woods on his place and unobserved is learning to write with his left hand and walk, doing a lot of fancy cursing, but making progress. The other is in town and has taken up weaving in a big way, declaring he is engaged in manufacturing a burial robe for his pal.

The doctor encourages this sort of talk which might sound somewhat ghoulish to an outsider, but not to intimate friends for they have been a rather ribald trio from birth. Incidentally the doctor thinks the weaver may carry out his project successfully, for he is a 100 per cent extrovert, while the man in the country tries to be but isn't—QUITE. And extroverts—real ones—don't worry. At least not MUCH.—R.W.R.

En Route "Liberty Limited," Chicago to Washington, D. C., Sept. 12.— This is another fast and fancy train, but can't really compare with the "City of San Francisco" except as to the observation car which is mainly glass and stainless steel and torpedo-shaped.

Much cooler and skies overcast, but still no real signs of fall—everything green, including corn, meadows and some of the grain. Going through Indiana now, like the proverbial dose of salts. We know how Indianaians love their native state and it no doubt has its points—for Indians—but it has never attracted your correspondent on his trips between Chicago and New York which started in the year 1886!

Down on the "Banks of the Wabash" it may be different, but up here around Ft. Wayne and Whitting it isn't to us.—"The Land that God Forgot!"

Here we are in Pittsburgh, Pa. And it seems only a few moments ago we left the Union station at Chicago. Fast enough for us, but not fast enough for our old pal, "Doc" Riddell.

We called on "Doc" just before we left Medford and characteristically he was all set to beat it from the Community hospital with a false set of whiskers and a FULL set of teeth. Hope he made it!

We have just been out to look at Pittsburgh.—It doesn't look any more promising than it has before. This may not be Pittsburgh's fault; it may well be the fault of the Pennsylvania railroad and the plot of ground chosen for its station, but the result is the same. (It is a very, very dreary, dirty and discouraging prospect!)

Tomorrow—God willing!—we shall be in Washington, though we have no idea where we will sleep—perhaps in Jackson Park where Barney Baruch hangs out,—or did on our last visit. For while we wired for a reservation we have had no confirmation as yet.

Well, anyway the war is over—World War No. II.—and we believe it can be made the last WORLD War—and we mean it!—if home sapiens, regardless of race or nationality, just shows SOME sense—if he has any!—R.W.R.

NUTRITIONAL VALUE OF IODINE

A cubic mile of sea water contains a minimum of 90 tons of iodine and, in the neighborhood of beds of sea weeds (kelp and sponges, from ten to a hundred times as much, according to Taylor (Jour. of the Franklin Institute, Aug. '32). All of the iodine occurs in nature not as elemental iodine but as chemical compounds of iodine, both inorganic iodides and organic compounds. These iodine compounds are mostly so soluble in water that they are being leached from the soil by the water of rain, melted snow and glaciers, wells, springs, rivers and carried down to the sea. When the water is evaporated from the surface of the sea (about a one yard depth of it over the entire ocean a year—or 71,389 cubic miles of water, enough to provide an average of 22 inches of rainfall over the entire land surface of the globe if we assume 29.27% of the earth's surface is land—these are

Dr. Brady iodine but as chemical compounds of iodine, both inorganic iodides and organic compounds. These iodine compounds are mostly so soluble in water that they are being leached from the soil by the water of rain, melted snow and glaciers, wells, springs, rivers and carried down to the sea.

tinism (dwarfed mental and physical development) or from myxedema (firm inelastic swelling of skin which does not pit on pressure, mental hebetude, subnormal temperature, dryness and loss of hair, etc.) as the inhabitants of certain regions in the Swiss Alps, in Austria, France, Sicily, India, Italy, do or have done. Prevailed so commonly in times past that the term "Derbyshire neck" was given to it. In times past, because today there is less isolation. Modern transportation brings foods from distant areas, even some sea food, to the remotest communities, and hence more iodine.

Nutrition authorities estimate that every one needs from 50 to 200 micrograms of iodine daily to maintain good nutrition and good health, or, say, one-fourth hundredth of a grain.

The Iodine Ration I recommend for everybody, man, woman and child, is a tablet containing 150 micrograms of iodine—one should eat one Iodine Ration tablet every day for prevention, three tablets every day for correction of cretinism, myxedema, hypothyroidism or any of the manifestations (to be described later) of iodine deficiency.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Acne Rosacea
Can you give me a remedy for a red nose? Mine is always flaming. I am a teetotaler. (A. M. I.)
Answer—So are most persons with red noses. Send stamped envelope bearing your address, for pamphlet on "Acne." That is the medical term for blackheads and pimples. Acne rosacea is "rhin blossom." You must ask for this in writing—a clipping will not do. The reason why I object to clippings of my own column is simple this: It slows up service. I like to keep not more than ten or fifteen thousand letters behindhand.

Lassie, the collie which set a Hollywood record by winning stardom in her first picture, "Lassie Comes Home," chalks up another "first" of the canine world in her second picture by playing a dual role. In doing so Lassie also resumes "her" rightful sex. "She" actually is a male collie.
