THREE SENTENCED FOR KILLING JAPS
Tokyo, Oct. 4—(U.P.)—Three American army sergeants today were sentenced to dishonorable discharges and 10 years at hard labor for the killing of two Japanese civilians following their conviction of manslaughter by a general court martial.

The verdict was reached after two days of testimony. The trio had been charged with first degree murder the first against a member of the occupation forces since Japan's surrender.

Trial Judge Capt. Anthony Constantino, Dunkirk, N. Y., accused the men of killing Katsuzi Tanaka and his 16-year-old son, Osamu Tanaka following a saki drinking party at the Tanaka home in Yokohama after they had gone AWOL from a nearby camp.

The men all joined the famed 1st cavalry division after the war's end, officers said. They were:

Sgt. Ray J. Oroark, 25, Los Angeles, and formerly of Kansas City.

Sgt. Sherman E. Hufmann, 19, Pittsfield, Ill.

Say "Fall Russet" Instead of Bosc, Is Ad Bureau Plea

At a recent meeting of the Oregon-Washington-California Pear Bureau's advertising committee in Portland it was voted to change the name of the russet-skinned, long-necked often called "Bosc" to "Fall Russet" pears.

"Fall Russet" was decided upon as superior, because it has proved to have more sales appeal to consumers and is a more descriptive name than "Bosc."

For easier identification, in making the name change-over Pear Bureau literature and advertising will at first refer to "Fall Russet Bosc" pears. But eventually it is planned to drop the designation, "Bosc," altogether.
