Trend to Heavy Drinking Is Blamed On New Strains and Tensions On Emotions

Chicago, Oct. 5 — (U.P.) — Two psychiatrists estimated today that there are 600,000 chronic alcoholics in the nation, 2,000,000 heavy drinkers and 38,000,000 "social drinkers."

Dr. Robert B. Seliger, Baltimore, assistant visiting phychiatrist at Johns Hopkins hospital, and Victoria Crawford, psychotherapist at Haarlem Lodge sanitarium, Cantonsville, Md., wrote in the American medical association journal that the trend toward heavy drinking in the past 25 years is the product of new strains and tensions on the emotions.

The American business men's research foundation reported that consumption of alcoholic beverages jumped from 1,330,700,000 gallons in 1934, the first year after the repeal of prohibition, to 2,735,000,000 gallons in 1944.

Per capita consumption of beer rose from 10.53 gallons yearly in 1934 to 20.48 gallons in 1944, the foundation said.

Last year, according to foundation records the average yearly expenditure for liquor was $54 a person.
