

Dog Who Traveled 6,000 Miles In Search of Master Leaves Camp White

When Capt. Stanley C. Raye left Camp White Saturday for Letterman Hospital in San Francisco he took along Joker, his Cocker Spaniel dog. The captain knows now that he mustn't leave Joker behind whenever he goes anywhere, for the last time Joker was left behind, he traveled 6,000 miles by land and sea in search of his master. Joker belonged to Raye before he entered the army, serving as a faithful companion for his master and watchdog of the Raye's infant daughter, Mavis, at the Raye home in Pittsburg, Calif.

When the captain was sent overseas the devoted dog was heartbroken, refusing to eat and searching ceaselessly for his master. Leaving home, he wandered to Oakland some 30 miles distant and attached himself to a company of soldiers about to leave for overseas. He boarded the transport with the men and after hiding for a time, then appeared to begin his search among the men. When the ship's commander sentenced him to death, a kindly major adopted Joker and took him ashore on a Pacific island.

No one knows how Joker found his way to the little island where he finally found his master. Three months after Joker had left home the captain looked out of his tent one day and couldn't believe his eyes when he saw the dog coming past the tent with another officer. In the three months he had traveled some 6,000 miles.

Joker stayed with Capt. Raye until his return to the United States and spent three weeks at Camp White with the officer. Joker's story was featured in the Oct. 21 issue of the American Weekly, copies of which were received by the captain before he left Camp White last week.

They keep on hitting the ball

In the Army they hit the ball—and in the Navy, too!

They did their part in the biggest job the world ever saw. They did it "right now"! And that, say many letters about service men who have returned to our employ, is still their way of doing things. Here's just one sample:

"Sunday, a rental battery fell out of my car. The plate which held the battery had rusted through. I managed to prop the battery in temporarily... then called at your station.

"Mr. Blank, the attendant, spent more than an hour devising a brace. Never have I seen a man work so hard on a task—a task which wasn't in the Standard of California kit of services. In fact, he worked past his closing time. For initiative, Blank—who told me he was just out of the service—has my vote. I congratulate Standard of California on having him."

To this we can add that everyone in our organization finds inspiration in the vigor and conscientiousness shown by returned service men toward their duties—whether they were with us before, or have come in since donning uniform.

All through this war we have received letters from employees in uniform saying how eager they were to be back again with "the Company." We'd like to say right here and now how happy we are to have them back. Daily, they're giving us new reason to be proud of our returned service men.
