

COUNTY WELFARE BUDGET PROVIDES MORE NEXT YEAR

Portland, Nov. 5—Jackson county, for 1945-46 tax year, budgeted $112,000 property tax for aid to aged persons, unemployed relief, blind assistance and aid to dependent children. This total amount was 31 per cent more than was levied for the same purposes for the 1942-43 tax year.

Throughout Oregon 24 counties this year levied more taxes on property for the four welfare programs than in 1942-43; eleven counties, budgeted less this year, a decrease accounted for by reduced cost of unemployment relief. One county, Lane, has kept its budgeted welfare costs at the same figure for four years.

Of the budgeted welfare property tax cost in Jackson county for the current tax year, $85,000 was for aid to aged persons, $5,000 for relief, $2,000 for the blind, and $20,000 for dependent children.

Jackson county budgeted this year, as a property tax, 93 per cent more for aid to aged in 1945-46 than it provided three years ago; 84 per cent less for relief of unemployed, due to the state assuming a larger share than in previous years of general relief costs, and its aid to children was 100 per cent more than three years ago, according to a summary of welfare property tax costs made by Oregon Business & Tax Research, Inc.

Property tax budgeted for aid to aged, all counties, for 1945-46, was $1,982,768, or 43.6 per cent more than was levied by all counties during 1942-43. The amount of taxes to be raised for unemployed relief dropped from $721,912 for 1942-43, to $209,870 for 1945-46, a 71 per cent decrease.

Action of some counties in refusing to budget for welfare purposes the amount requested by the state welfare commission, has raised a question whether such requests must be met by counties even though the amount would prevent raising tax funds believed to be necessary for other county purposes, according to the taxpayer organization's summary of the welfare situation in Oregon.
