

Plural Marriages Of Utah Mormons Are Upheld By Defending Attorney

Washington, Nov. 6—(UP)—The supreme court today was told by an attorney defending nine Utah citizens that if plural marriage is held to be prostitution and debauchery, it will cast aspersions on the "blood of half the people of Utah."

Holding up a Mormon Bible for the justices to see, the attorney Claude T. Barnes, declared: "By no strength of the imagination can you apply the white slave act to the actions of these people."

Barnes argued on behalf of eight men and one woman who are members of a Mormon fundamentalist cult which believes "in plural or 'celestial' marriage." The group was convicted in the U. S. district court for Utah under the Mann act and the Lindbergh kidnaping law. The supreme court agreed to review the convictions after they were upheld by the 10th circuit court of appeals.

Harold Judson acting U. S. solicitor general, asserted that the plural marriage situation had become a "national scandal" with which Utah was unable to cope.

He insisted that only about two per cent of the Mormon faith had engaged in the practice of plural marriage and that the fundamentalist cult was the only branch which believed in more than one marriage at a time.

Ever hear of a Built-in-Smile?

When it's a smiling and a gracious day—soft and sunny and color-filled—it's easy to feel on top of the world. But when frowning skies glower at a gray world, it's no trick at all to feel down in the dumps.

Yes, sir, everyone reflects the world around him. Everyone likes smiling skies... smiling people... smiling surroundings. That's why we have produced at our El Segundo Refinery a machine shop that is more than a mechanical marvel. It's a workshop with a built-in-smile. And practically, forsooth, in technicolor!

Color dynamics is the experts' term for the way we've used soft and pleasing shades. They're just as pretty as anything you see through rose-colored glasses—and much more varied. Everywhere are colors that rest the eye and soothe the spirit—thereby promoting cheerfulness... health... vigor... joy-of-living. They take the ink out of work.

And color accents are used to promote safety. Mobile units are decked in bright colors that catch the eye. It's the modern development of color in a safety role first assigned it when red came to mean "Stop-Danger!" and green first said "Go Ahead."

The built-in-smile of color dynamics is partly the outcome of wartime lessons in camouflage—turned inside out. In seeking to fool the eye, researchers learned many ways to please it. So some things about this progressive step are very new. Not new, however, is the desire it expresses—our desire always to show progress on behalf of our people. That goes away back.

Swiss Starts Out For Global Jaunt In Small Sailboat

London—(UP)—After a long struggle with the authorities to get the necessary permits to leave England, Hans De Meiss Teufenn, a 34-year-old Swiss, has started out alone in his 23-foot sailboat, "Speranza," on a voyage which he hopes will take him around the world.

However, Teufenn was allowed to take only $40 out of the country, and to supplement this he will write articles and photographs scenes during the voyage.

He plans to go, without petrol, from Southampton to Lisbon on a wide tack out into the Atlantic, then to Casablanca and the Canary Islands and from there to the West Indies. He expects the last part to be the real test.

From the West Indies, Teufenn would like to go to New York, then try the hazardous trip around the Horn. During the voyage the "Speranza" will fly the Swiss flag.

His yacht has sleeping accommodations for three, but Teufenn prefers to sail alone. A "Bermuda Rig" keeps his boat on the course while he sleeps.
