WAR INSURANCE LAPSE PUZZLES VETERAN HEADS

Washington —(U.P.)—Veterans' Administration officials alarmed at the failure of ex-service men to keep up their government insurance, took consolation today from commercial insurance men, who said young people were a headache to them too. Gen. Omar N. Bradley, veterans' administrator, recently conferred with five top insurance executives in New York to learn what, if anything, was the matter with National Service Life Insurance. He had no comment on what they told him. But it was learned that the natural improvidence of youth was a large factor in the insurance men's appraisal of these facts: Of the estimated 2,500,000 men discharged from service, only 96,158 had converted their war policies to permanent form. And 1,483,949 policies had been allowed to lapse for failure to maintain premiums. "Young men don't buy in-insurance—they have to be sold it," was the way one insurance man put it. Apparently army, navy and veterans' administration have not measured up as salesmen. It was pointed out that a veteran leaving the service must take a positive step himself in order to preserve his insurance. He must write the Veterans' Administration, enclosing a premium, and ask that his policy be kept in force. Human nature being what it is, the insurance men said, the average veteran never gets around to taking this step. Months later he may remember it but by then his policy may have lapsed. Some modifications of National Service Life Insurance were discussed at the New York session but Harold W. Breining, assistant veterans' administrator in charge of insurance, said no concrete proposals were made.

Several names were read for membership and a large class is waiting for the degrees. The masquerade dance Oct. 27 was well attended. Music was furnished by Mrs. Christenson, Lloyd Smith, Frank Greenwood and Bob Knight. Prize for the best costumes was given to Mr. and Mrs. Harold Laws who were dressed as negroes. Mrs. Kate Rhueling announced that the grange quilt would be put on the frames at her home and that all the ladies are to come any time a day they can and quilt some on it. This will be for the bazaar.

Region of Home Is Determined by Way "R's" Pronounced Cincinnati —(U.P.)—Americans from the midwest, south and east tell where they are from, not by the way they mind their "p's" and "q's" but their "r's." At least Miss Ruth Dowden, speech instructor at the University of Cincinnati, says she can spot the geographic origin of a person by the way he rolls off his "r's."
