Railroad "Goats" Being Replaced By Up-to-Date Engines

Omaha, Neb. (U.P.) — Is the "yard goat" slated to join the "dodo bird?" Railroaders are beginning to wonder.

The "goats" are the familiar little puffing steam switch engines which dot the country's railroad yards. Plenty of them still are to be seen, but new diesel switchers are giving them plenty of competition.

In Omaha and Council Bluffs, the Union Pacific railroad has replaced most of its "goats" with diesels. Thirty-two are now in use and more are scheduled for delivery.

The "goats" are being kept on a standby basis.

Sam Houston of Tennessee and Texas held a position unique in American history in that he was the governor of two states, the president of a republic, and U. S. Senator from one state.
