I am not able, always, to draw a distinct line between good and bad. There are times when I long for the surety of those who can say "this is black and that is white and combining the two most certainly does not make gray." And then sometimes the sin will be of a nature which amuses me when, by orthodox standards, I should be horrified.

Take, for instance, a certain woman in our neighborhood. Deserted by her husband and left to shift for herself and four children, she didn't let this get her down. Right away she rustled herself all sorts of jobs; washed and sewed and cleaned, asking sympathy and aid from no one. Furthermore she did all this with such joy and gaity as won our admiration. Not especially clever, she had a quality which transcended cleverness.

As might be expected of such a woman, life beat strongly within her. Sturdy of body, having a boundless vitality, even hard work could not subdue her instinct for complete living. So it came about that the witching voice of instinct called once too often. Later, a well-founded fear grew within her that she would soon have an extra mouth to feed.

She had, I must say, a rather foggy notion of the enormity of her sin and almost at once loudly lamented her state to all who would listen. And who would not! Indeed it seemed to me that many of her associates must have led very repressed lives, for how else account for their evident pleasure in hearing of her predicament. A psychologist might have checked this off to second-hand participation!

But it was her own viewpoint which afforded the humorous angle. For she shrugged the whole affair off "onto the shoulders of Divine Providence;" like a case of measles or an act of God for which there was no personal blame. Said she, "everything was going so fine—the kids in school and my washing machine almost paid for—and then THIS had to happen!"

I remembered her devoted mother love, her unceasing labor, her aloneness. Maybe she wasn't dazzlingly white but certainly she wasn't all black.

How about calling her a rather pale shade of gray.

The average cotton yield per acre in Alabama during the nine years from 1934 through 1943 was 236 pounds. The average in 1944 was 339 pounds per acre. This year's yield is estimated at 328 pounds.
