INFLAMMATION OF THE IRIS
The iris is the pigmented ring surrounding the black pupil or central dot of the eye. The iris of every human being is brown and no other color, except in albino persons, of any race born with a deficiency of pigment in skin, hair and eyes—their eyes look pink or blue according to the angle of refraction. If the iris is most heavily pigmented the eyes look "black" to the casual observer; if less heavily pigmented, they look "gray," "green" etc.; and eyes only slightly pigmented look "blue." Now don't try to dispute this with me. It is a matter of fact, and not my opinion or yours. My eyes, I have been told, are green, yellow, or brindle, but whenever I have to state the color of my eyes and hair (if any), for instance when applying for a license to drive a car on the public highway, I call everything "brown" and so far as the examiners can see it may be so. Anyway, if you guess anybody's eye color "brown" you'll be right 99.44% of the time, wrong only if the individual happens to be an albino.

Contrary to the common expression that the pupils (central black dots) contract and dilate it is the irises that contract and dilate—the pupil being just the hole in the ring, through which light passes. The iris or ring contracts, making the pupil or hole smaller, when the light is strong. It dilates, making the pupil or hole larger, when the light is not so bright, and hence the pupils are largest in a dim light or a dark place, smallest in a brightly lighted place. The iris works precisely as the shutter of a camera should work for a good photograph.

The irises contract when the eyes regard an object a foot away, dilate when the eyes regard anything at a considerable distance—say when you gaze off at the horizon—or beyond the horizon in a daydream. Incidentally this is good for the eyes, particularly for eyes doing much close or near work—to take your eyes off your work and look away to the horizon—or beyond for a few moments every half hour or so if the boss isn't watching. It eases the strain, rests the eyes, relaxes tension, keeps blood pressure down, shoos off crowsfeet, and, for the boss's information in case he or she doesn't know, it increases the speed and accuracy of your work.

Inflammation of the iris is iritis. Further than to say that the redness of the eyes is most marked on the front of the eyeball close around the iris (color ring) in iritis, and actual pain in the eyes occurs with just smarting, burning or irritation with the more familiar conjunctivitis or inflammation of linings of eyelids, there is little I can tell about iritis here. All I know about iritis is that you had better consult an oculist—that is, a physician who limits his practice to diagnosis and treatment of eye diseases.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS
Chicken-or-Egg?
Man, 32, in good health, but all his father's family seem to have passed prematurely with "heart trouble," angina pectoris, coronary thrombosis, dropsy. Of seven brothers and sisters of that generation only one has reached 60. None addicted to alcohol, and the only one who smokes at all is the lone survivor. What precaution or course would you suggest to save this man from such a fate?
Answer—I dunno. In my crude view of the question it seems that people with heart trouble, angina, coronary thrombosis and the like last
