Your Health and It's Care

LAST SCENE OF ALL—SANS TEETH

I'm no poet and Shakespeare was no health authority—or was he? Was it just happenstance that he described it just that way?—Last scene of all, that ends this strange eventful history, is second childishness and more oblivion, sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans everything. Or did he mean to imply that when you lose your teeth, you're about ready to turn up your toes, even though you still can see large print and tell the difference between sweet and bitter?

As I say, I'm reciting truth and poetry when I say the first key to vite is Save Your Teeth.

Nor am I indulging in a flight of fancy when I express the opinion that loss of one or more teeth and failure to replace them immediately with functionally efficient dentures is a common cause of every-day complaints of stomach trouble, acidity, gas, indigestion, bloating, heartburn, "mucous colitis" and the like. Impairment or crippling of the function of chewing, masticating food, inevitably interferes with normal digestion, because an important part of the digestion of starchy food normally takes place in the mouth during mastication and continues for half an hour or more after the food has entered the stomach. This is not my notion—it is physiology—as you will find if you refer to any modern textbook of physiology.

I do hope that no one reading this will infer that if his or her teeth are missing and he or she hasn't the price or the sense to get new teeth, the alternative is to avoid starchy foods. It is true that the arctic explorers Stefansson and Anderson lived for a year on an exclusive meat diet, under constant observation and study of physicians, physiologists and pathologists, and both men finished the year in rather better all-round condition than they had shown at the beginning of the experiment.

But for most people, here in America, starchy foods ordinarily must be eaten. They should furnish most of the daily calories—and by starchy foods I mean such foods as wheat and wheat products, potato, corn, rice, oats, beans.

Our knowledge of the important part the teeth play in digestion, health, vitality, longevity, physical efficiency is comparatively new—so new that it has scarcely permeated the consciousness of many a practicing physician, to say nothing of the practicing dentist. Indeed, to read some of the most pretentious medical textbooks published within the last few years you would get the impression that absence of half a dozen or more teeth from the patient's mouth is of no consequence as long as the few teeth still surviving are not harboring a hypothetical septic focus. I fear that few medical practitioners insist on patients sans teeth having suitable dentures installed.

A magazine published a picture of a ship's stoker and a British cabinet minister—both men laughing and displaying yawning spaces where their teeth once were. It is conceivable that the stoker didn't know any better or that he couldn't afford dentistry. But it gives one all sorts of gloomy forebodings when a cabinet minister accepts defeat like that.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Red Injected Eyelids
 Son, 14, has red injected eyelids, especially the lower lid, and complains constantly of smarting and itching as though from sand or something in the eyes. Mrs. D. B.
Answer—In some instances such eye trouble is due to vitamin B-complex deficiency, particularly vitamin B2 (otherwise called G and riboflavin) deficiency. It can do no harm to supplement the diet with liberal amount of vitamin B-complex for several weeks and see. Plain wheat, milk, and dried brewer's yeast powder are the best sources of B-complex, and riboflavin.

The Morn
 My friend says that when the doctor giving a physical examination taps the knee to see if it jumps and it doesn't jump he is a moron. Is that true?
Answer—Who? The knee jerk, normal, exaggerated or absent, has no significance as to the mentality. (Copyright 1946, John F. Dille Co.)
